COUNTY NEWS.

Bethel.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Wedding bells are sounding. At the residence of Mr. Samuel Greenway, Clark's Mills, Mr. David Smith was united to Miss Hattie Greenway by the Rev. Mr. Elliott. A pleasant time to them.

—At the residence of W. Galbraith, 2d Con. of Camden, his daughter Mary was married to Mr. G. Irish, of Hartington.

—J. Alcombrack has built a handsome residence, where he intends to reside.

Jottings from the North.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—The manager for Mr. Sutherland, lumberman, of Belleville, left here for Belleville, seriously disposed. Only a week ago he was hauling logs over the tramway, in good health. His family physician has but little hopes of his recovery.

—Mr. Fred Kenyon and sister are the guests of Amos Spencer.

—At Flinton, on the 20th inst., by the Rev. Mr. Brown, Mr. George Deline, formerly of Richmond, to Miss Essa Blanche, second daughter of Mr. A. P. Wickware, of this place. No cards. Among the many friends, the writer extends his warmest congratulations, wishing the happy couple every felicity, trusting their only troubles may be "little ones."

—The Scott-Snyder hunting party returned on the 25th ult., on their route to Napanee, from Plevna. Some five deer were the spoil.

Odessa.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Every room in our village is occupied, and inquiries are made daily for tenements and business places to let.

—We very much need a tailor, and last week one Mr. Buchanan, said to be a first-class man, searched diligently for a place to set up business but found every place taken up.

—Among the latest arrivals is Mrs. Seeley, whose name has been prominently before the public in connection with a case recently tried in Kingston.

—Prof. Hodge gave an entertainment in the town hall on Friday evening last, which was well attended.

—Our municipal fathers have at last displayed some regard for the aesthetic and have thoroughly renovated the town hall. The audience room has been enlarged, a new ceiling put on and thoroughly painted throughout. It now has a very pleasing appearance.

—Last Sunday morning a memorial service was held in the church here, when reference was made to Ida and Harry, the deceased children of Mr. E. Clark, who were buried recently, both on the same day.

—The quarterly meeting of the Odessa Circuit will be held here next Sunday morning. The Quarterly Board will meet on Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 4.

—The Odessa Lodge, I. O. G. T., will hold an open temple in the Town Hall, on Tuesday evening, Nov. 4th.

—Dr. Meacham left here on Monday last to lay the petition for the submission of the Scott Act in this county before the Government. It was understood that the Rev. M. L. Pearson would accompany him.

Napanee Mills.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Mr. Ward, agent for the Map of Ontario, published by Mr. Carter, of Toronto, visited Napanee Mills on Tuesday, and exhibited his map to the teachers and one of the trustees. The map is a good one and seemed accurate enough, except that the territory lately awarded to Ontario was not given on the map itself but printed in one corner along with a small map of

After considerable wrangling the Yarker men threw out the bait to Colebrook that if they would support the by-law a station would be built half way between the two places. Colebrook swallowed the bait and agreed to help and the by-law was carried. At that time the line was surveyed to run nearly a mile from Yarker and a half mile from Colebrook, and except at Galbraith's Crossing the station would not have been near either place. Yarker men by giving a bond to the company of $4,000 to secure them against loss, had the line changed to its present position, which has altered the position of placing the stations far from the leading roads of travel and making a station at Yarker a necessity to accommodate the travelling public. Mr. Rathbun, in order to satisfy the Colebrook people, offered to build them a comfortable station at Galbraith's Crossing, which would be the best place for their accommodation, but they refused. To meet the requirements of the by-law a station has been built half way between the two places, and if not used it can be made a section house. Colebrook's honest poet can now give Chapter 3 by copying another's brain work, without acknowledging the author.

Moscow.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—The Yarker correspondent is not satisfied with upholding the Yarkerites in their malignity and strategem with the Colebrook people in regard to the station, but has opened fire on Moscow just because it possessed a director with a little too much wit and influence for them, and didn't get the "grand bounce," as their director did. We don't think Mr. Rathbun desires any advice, especially from the Yarker correspondent, as to whom he will give the g. b. He is a man of good sense and saw long ago who deserved the g. b., and gave it, too. We would advise our Yarker friend to be a little careful how he attacks our directors, as we well know he has been previously attacked by the Yarkerites and they have always got trapped.

—Mr. Samuel Syke being the only shoemaker in town, is doing a rushing business. Rumour says he will take a partner soon. It's all right, Sam.

—Messrs. Benjamin and O'Loughlin, of Yarker, and Mr. VanLoven, of this place are buying barley at the station; very little has been bought yet.

—A large and convenient coal shed has been erected here.

—The population of our little hamlet has been augmented by some new families lately.

—Mr. Hiram Johnston is making preparations to build a grand brick residence next year. Ah, Hiram, what next?

—The missionary meeting was held on Monday night last but on account of the storm was poorly attended.

Bath.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

THE HUNTERS' RETURN.—Mr. Peter Amey, proprietor of the Bay View House, returned on Tuesday from Gull Lake, in the Township of Clarendon, with five fine deer, the result of one week's work on the hunting grounds. He was accompanied in his expedition by Capt. Jack Miller, a noted hunter of the interior, to whom he is very much indebted for the quantity of game bagged on this occasion. The "king of the forest," a magnificent buck weighing 256 pounds, was captured by Mr. Amey after an exciting chase on Gull Lake. He was first discovered towards the middle of the lake, swimming in true Boynton style against wind and current. Mr. Amey jumped into his little boat and started in pursuit, and after an hour's hard pulling, he had gained sufficiently on him to send a ball across his bow, which instead of stopping his lead added impetus to his movements, and he spurted "a la Hanlon," and left his pursuer far behind. It was some minutes before Mr. Amey could regain his lost ground.

Sharbot Lake.

NOTES.—Messrs. David Taggart and Norman Switzer are home from Oso on a short visit.—There are three operators engaged at the depot.—Several deer have been killed this fall.—John Docil killed a bear last week which weighed 78 pounds and William Harrison one that weighed 250 pounds.—The boys are catching lots of salmon.—Mr. Newlands, of Kingston, is finishing Gen. Aspinwall's cottage.

CHURCH DEDICATION.—The dedication of St. James' Roman Catholic Church, at Sharbot Lake, took place on Wednesday. Low Mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Twohey, and His Lordship Bishop Cleary delivered an able address. The little church, which will seat about 400 people, was filled. At the close of the services a collection was taken up and the neat little sum of $130 was subscribed. The bishop appointed Rev. Father Kelly, of Kingston, parish priest.—Whig.

Stella—Amherst Island.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Notwithstanding the gale of Monday, the Hero got to Stella safely but lay here for the day, giving the crew a chance to see their friends once more before the season closes.

—The dairy is closed at last after a very successful season, but they have not got all the cheese shipped although they are all sold.

—I see your Ernestine correspondent says barley is going to go up. I wish it would start soon, for it is getting late in the season—only one more month to come and go and winter is here.

—The missionary meeting in the Presbyterian Church was a success. Mr. Coulthard gave an eloquent address on missions, and although it is generally a dry subject, he made it very interesting for an hour.

—The first meeting of our dancing school was more than successful, thirty-four members joining and others still to join. Next meeting, Nov. 6th, Thanksgiving Day, I guess we will give thanks in music and dancing.

—If Stella's vote will kill the Scott Act they may as well withdraw the petition to the Government for an election, and let things go on as they are.

—If it was known who spat on that young lady's dress the evening of the dancing class, there would be hot times for a little while.

—No mail Saturday or Monday on account of the high winds. Oh, that we had a telegraph!

DANIEL.

Centreville.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—There, girls, didn't we say that he would be back again?

—The days are now in the "sere and yellow leaf."

—Miss Ida Lucas, of Moscow, has been spending a week with Miss Grace Long.

—Miss Laura Somerson of Newburgh, spent Wednesday with Miss Willie Vrooman of this place.

—Master Harold Miller, son of Mr. J. S. Miller, has been dangerously ill with diphtheria, but under the skilful treatment of Drs. Beaman and Rutan, is slowly recovering. There have been some other light attacks of the disease in the village but all are now convalescent.

—The residents of the village were gladdened one day last week by the return of Mrs. and Miss Ash from visiting their brother, Mr. Cyrus Ash, who is doing a rushing business in Hastings village.

—Mrs. A. Jones, of Centreville, has been spending a few days in Napanee.

—The zeal and enterprise of some of our most influential men in the church, is shown by the handsome new iron fences around two of the grave yards, which have just been completed at a cost of $150. The appearance of the yard is very much improved by the erection of three very handsome monuments.

—The second social under the auspices of the Ladies Aid Society, was held at Mr. Charles Wagar's, and was a grand success, Tamworth, Enterprise, Moscow and Yarker being well represented. Receipts, about $13 which are to go the teachers and one of the trustees. The map is a good one and seemed accurate enough, except that the territory lately awarded to Ontario was not given on the map itself but printed in a corner along with a small map of Ontario and marked, "disputed territory." Mr. Lasher, trustee, made the remark that maps would soon be published assigning the said disputed territory to its correct position in North-Western Ontario, on the same scale as this map of Ontario, at which this encyclopaedia of knowledge (Mr. Ward) said it would be impossible to do so as a map with the disputed territory and Ontario proper upon it, on the same scale as the one he represented, would have to be seven times as long as the said map of Ontario alone, or about 35 feet. Then came a disagreement between the teacher and the agent at to the size the map should be, when Mr. Ward measured off seven lengths of his map, or tried to do so, but could not find enough counter. Mr. Stratton tried to explain to him that the map would only have to be a trifle more than as long again, when the agent called him a fool, and told him he did not know anything, and indulged in such slang as, "He's a smarty; he's one of the smartys." Now, Mr. Editor, if the said disputed territory takes up six times as much space on the map as Ontario would take on the same scale, should not Hon. Mr. Mowat, who gained it for Ontario, be carried around upon the hands of the people and held up to future generations as the champion of Ontario's rights instead of being allowed to go with only a public demonstration of his popularity. We hope to meet Mr. Ward, this paragon of knowledge, again.

Yarker.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Corporate bodies, they say, have no souls. It was the first time we were made aware that employees were not possessed of any when that precious epistle appeared in your paper from the telegraph agent at Harrowsmith. He cares nothing about what suffering is caused by blunders made by operators, but he is very anxious that the public should not know it. He denies that the error was made. This denial will not alter the facts, but it directs suspicion more clearly to the Harrowsmith office from the fact that at Harrowsmith there is a loop line leading to Colebrook and Yarker which is sometimes used to send messages, but not very often. The operator at Sharbot Lake states that he sent the message as he received it from Dr. Cannon, that Herbert was better. The message was received by the operator at Kingston that Herbert was dead. The question is, where was the change made? What particular knowledge has the operator at Harrowsmith that the line was open through to Kingston? Let us hear the facts. This is not the only mistake that has been made nor are satisfactory explanations given by the heads of the company. Many people have lost confidence in this mode of communication with friends, and if necessary I can give several mistakes made that have caused inconvenience and trouble to several parties.

—The first accident occurred on Saturday, when the five o'clock down train struck a two-year-old heifer belonging to Charles Emberly, the engine lifting her from the track and killing her instantly. No other damage was done. His land is on both sides of the track, and his gates, which were put on by the Company, appear to have been left open, and thus the cow got on the track. There are others who should take warning, for the engineer is greatly annoyed by cows on the track.

—The C. M. Church was comfortably heated on Sabbath, to the satisfaction of all present. New drums and pipes have been put in by W. Drury, tinsmith, and he has accomplished the heating of the church without causing smoke, to the discomfort of the congregation.

—George McDonald is doing a rushing business buying grain and shipping it by the N. T. & Q. Railway. He is securing most of the grain around Moscow, Colebrook and Clark's Mills.

—Mr. Henry Ashley gave a party Monday evening to welcome his son-in-law, Rev. Mr. Jones. Among the guests were Dr. and Mrs. Cannon and Mr. and Mrs. H. Cambridge.

—Mr. G. D. Hawley, M. P. P., was in our village Tuesday and went away by the evening train.

—John Bredin of Kingston, was here Tuesday taking a view of our village. He was surprised at the progress made.

—Mrs. Futz of Violet, was the guest of H. Cambridge on Sunday.

—Mrs. W. Drury of Kingston, visited friends here Sunday.

—J. Crumbley, A. C. Scott's baker, has left for Michigan.

—Miss Scott, of Newburgh, returned home on Saturday after a week's visit.

—I will give your readers a short chapter of the Colebrook and Yarker dispute: The township by-law granting a bonus to the railway company, was defeated on the first vote. To secure its passage a little electioneering was done, and the Yarker men do not profess to be saints, so they set to work to secure the cooperation of Colebrook, which was hostile to the road.

send a man across his bow, when instead of stopping his lead added impetus to his movements, and he spurted "a la Hanlon," and left his pursuer far behind. It was some minutes before Mr. Ames could regain his lost ground, but when he did and had reloaded his rifle for the second time and fired, the deer was seen to waver in his course, as if wounded; a third shot however, settled the business for him, and Mr. Ames had the proud satisfaction of lassoing and conveying him safely to land. This fine animal will remain on exhibition at the Bay View House for a few days, in order that those desirous of beholding one of the monarchs of the forest, may view his remains.

RESULT OF ADVERTISING.—Mr. E. McKenty reports a boom in business since the issue of his celebrated advertisement, offering all kinds of goods at prices reaching way down below zero. He declares now that there is a balm in Gilead, and that balm is printers' ink.

—Mr. F. H. Priest is doing an immense trade through the county. He keeps two teams constantly on the road supplying the farmers with goods in his line. He is deserving of much credit for placing the price of bread at 10c per loaf, in advance of any other dealer in the county. This is a step in the right direction and worthy of being recorded.

TEMPERANCE.—Mr. McMurray delivered a lecture on this well worn subject, at the town hall on Friday evening last, to a house well filled with lovers of the cause. The Bath choir, under the able leadership of Mrs. C. L. Rogers, furnished the music for the occasion. The lecturer complimented them very highly for their efficiency and expressed himself as delighted with the selections which had been so ably rendered.

PERSONAL.—The Misses Stella and Maud Walker, daughters of Sidney Walker, Esq., of Odessa, and Miss Linter of Kingston, were the guests of Miss May Rogers on Tuesday last. They visited the different places of interest in and around our cozy little town and expressed themselves well pleased with their visit.

Newburgh.

[Correspondence of THE EXPRESS.]

—Mr. McMurray, the celebrated Canadian temperance orator, delivered a telling address on Wednesday evening to a large audience. He dwelt on the superiority of the Scott Act over the Dunkin Bill and spoke very forcibly on the ruin intemperance had wrought on the brightest and best in the land. On Sunday morning and evening he addressed large congregations in the Methodist Church. In the afternoon he gave a very excellent address to the Sabbath School children, and a large number of parents, visitors to the school. Monday evening he delivered a very laughable and comical lecture on Wit, Humor and Humourists, and gave many specimens of native English, Irish, Scotch and American wit and humor. He awarded the palm of victory to the son of Erin. The proceeds were something over $10. Mr. McMurray is a fine speaker and writer and has a keen sense of the humorous and ridiculous. We bespeak for him a large house wherever he goes. His lecture stood the test.

—It is reported that the cheese factory here will close in a couple of weeks.

—Mr. Thomas Scott has bought the right and title of the celebrated feather cleaner, and will make the feathers fly this winter.

—Mr. Ed. Madden is re-shingling his drive house and stable.

—Mr. Stephen Hill returned home last week for the winter.

—The coal at the station is selling very fast.

—The telegraph poles on the N. T. & Q. R.R. are set up as far as Newburgh.

—Mrs. Jackson, an elderly lady and a highly respected resident of this vicinity, died on Thursday and was buried on Saturday in the Methodist Cemetery. Rev. A. Elliott, B. A., conducted the services at her late residence.

—Miss Coutts Burdett, who has been very low for some weeks past, is now convalescent.

—Rev. Mr. Briden, who has been prostrated during the past week, is slowly improving.

—Mrs. Wm. Nugent has gone west to visit relatives and friends in the vicinity of Peterboro and Port Hope.

—Mr. Burdett's new building on Main Street, is progressing very fast to completion. It will be both useful and ornamental to our village. He is about the only man of an enterprising turn in the place. He builds good commodious dwellings for his tenants and is sure to keep them for a long time. We never heard of a tenant moving from one of his houses to another in the village.

—A hotel keeper in our town who is not in the habit of buying his bread from our village baker, presented him with a number of his bread tickets which he had taken over his bar for whisky. Who would not vote for the Scott Act?

—Mr. Carsallen, of Napanee, has rented Mr. Burdett's hall for a roller skating rink.

EYE OPEN.

Freeman's Worm Powders are safe in all cases. They destroy and remove Worms in children or adults.

—The second social under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society, was held at Mr. Charles Wagar's, and was a grand success, Tamworth, Enterprise, Moscow and Yarker being well represented. Receipts, about $13, which are to go towards furnishing the parsonage. The Centre-villians indulged in rather a primitive way of getting there, about twenty-five going in a lumber wagon. However, they were a jolly load, and they didn't get home till morning. The horses seemed to have the easiest time of it as they stood still in the road most of the time, the driver being so absorbed in entertaining the young ladies of the party that he forgot his duty, or perhaps he was moon struck.

—The ladies of the Methodist Church have re-organized a Ladies' Aid Society and propose holding several socials with the view of raising money for the parsonage. The first was held at Mr. E. J. Williams', Tuesday, 21st, and the second at Mr. C. Wagar's on the 28th. The next one will be given by Misses Ash, Shorey and Callary, and will be held at the residence of Miss Ash on November 25th. All are invited.

LITERARY NOTES.

Popular Science Monthly.

The 26th volume of this popular magazine opens auspiciously with the November number, which contains a number of very interesting and able papers. In the leading article on "The Relations between Mind and the Nervous System," Dr. W. A. Hammond defines mind as a force developed by gray nerve tissues, and maintaining that this force is generated wherever in the living organism, gray-nerve tissue is found. Some of Dr. Hammond's conclusions in this article are at variance with the teachings of Phrenology. In this number Herbert Spencer very ably replies to Frederic Harrison as to the "Origin of Synthetic Philosophy." "Pending Problems of Astronomy," by Prof. C. A. Young, and "What is Electricity?" by Prof. John Trowbridge, are two interesting addresses given at the recent meeting of the American Association. On the "German Testimony on Classics Question" Mr. F. A. Ferns has a very interesting paper, showing the German testimony is not all on one side and outlining the course of study demanded by the Modernists. "The future of the Negro in the South," by J. B. Craighead; "Drowning the Torrent in Vegetation," by S. W. Powell; "Chilian Volcanoes, Active and Extinct," by Karl Oehsenius; "The Chemistry of Cookery," by W. Mattice Williams; "Domestic Arts in Damaraland," by Rev. C. G. Butler; "The Oil Supply of the World" and a "Sketch of Prof. James Hall" are all interesting articles. The Editor in his usually vigorous and trenchant style comments on the Philadelphia meeting of the American Association, the Spencer-Harrison controversy, and the contrast between Words and Things in education, the reality of which has recently been denied by Prof. Porter. New York: D. Appleton & Co., 50c a number, $3 a year.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Brouchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve suffering humanity, I will send free of charge to all who desire it this receipt in German, French or English with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 119 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y.

AGRICULTURAL.

Seasonable Hints.

Nothing but the best and sweetest of food should be given to a flock of laying hens at this season of the year, because if they should stop laying when cold weather sets in, it would be very difficult to get them to lay again until after the first of January.

The time is approaching when every breeder should see that his fowls are provided with green food for winter use. Fowls as well as other animals require a certain amount of coarse and refuse matter to keep them free from constipation, indigestion and other kindred complaints. Before winter sets in, stow away cabbage, turnips, rowen, onions, and potatoes for the fowls.

There are points about hens moulting that ought to be better understood than they now are. It takes them nearly three months to go entirely through the process. When this begins they are generally sent to market, and unless the pullets are early, and begin to lay before winter sets in, they will probably not begin laying before spring, and the egg crop will be short. A better way is, to feed the hens well when moulting, and as all do not moult at one time, some eggs may be obtained nearly, or quite all through that trying period. By a judicious mode of feeding, connected with a little stimulating food, we may bring them through and put them in a fix to lay and develop a good coat of new feathers before cold weather sets in. Thus the chances will be that, if properly housed, a supply of eggs will be had all winter. From this course may be gained two advantages: Eggs are had in the winter when they command the highest price, and the hens will be the first to sit in the spring just when the good housewife or professional poultry keeper is most anxious to have the hens do that very thing. Hens which have passed the age of usefulness and those which put off moulting into cold weather should be sold as soon as the facts are known. There is no profit in such; let them go.—[American Stock Breeder.

Feeding Milch Cows.

Three times a day will suffice—early in the morning, mid-day, and at night. An exception to this may, however, be made, in the very long nights in winter. At this season a fourth feed to supper up with will be necessary, as the nights being so long too much would otherwise have to be given at the evening meal. Of course, such things as extra cake, &c., would be dealt out at the other feeding times. The cows should be so fed that a clean manger is always found when supplying the following meal. Water, too, should be allowed ad libitum with each meal. The feeding of beasts little and often may be carried out too far, as visiting them too often disturbs them in their necessary rest. Neither is it a good plan to be constantly pressing food upon them. Intervals to chew the cud and digest their food are demanded by nature. Some proper foods are sweet meadow hay, given partly long and partly chaffed, with some oat or barley straw mixed with pulp carrots, or cow cabbage, whichever are the more easily obtained, and from one to two gal-foods are sweet meadow hay, given partially long and partly chaffed, with some oat or barley straw mixed with pulp carrots, or cow cabbage, whichever are the more easily obtained, and from one to two gallons of scalded bran per day. A little mixed cotton or linseed cake every day would also improve the condition of the animal and the quality of the milk. Oats, too, are an excellent and cheap milk producer, if some of the above food cannot be obtained. Oats, however, should be crushed, or they would not be digested by all animals.

Fall Ploughing.

Joseph Harris thinks that farm horses can be put to no better use in autumn than pulling the plough. In the September Agriculturist he says: "There is nothing pays so well as fall ploughing, and getting land ready for spring ploughing. The longer I live the more I am impressed with this fact. I say nothing on the disputed question in regard to breaking up sod land in the autumn. It is possible, as some claim, that there is a loss from drainage. But if anyone will plough my land in the fall, I will run the risk. But what I have specially in mind is, land not occupied with any crop—corn land, potato land, bean land, stubble land and weed land. Stick in the plough if you can spare the time; if not, harrow or cultivate. Better still, do both. Light, sandy land, ploughed and prepared in the autumn, can be sown in the spring without ploughing. Heavy land, if ploughed and worked in the fall, may need ploughing again in the spring, but the work will be easier and the land better. Keep the horses busy until the snow flies. But the earlier the work is done the better. One ploughing while the land is dry is worth two ploughings when it is wet."

Onions.

Onions require a warm, light soil, such as is found in Spain and Egypt. The Spanish onion can almost be eaten without any condiments, but let any one try the same experiment with our Walthersfield, or other species of onion. The rank flavor is overpowering. To grow fine delicate onions, choose light warm soil and encourage a very rapid growth. We cannot, however, except in a few specially favored localities, grow onions equal to those of Spain, but we can grow better ones than those usually sent to market. For cooking purposes, the strong flavored onion may answer to the majority of persons, but the proper way to eat an onion is to eat it raw. I have eaten them thus in Spain with oil and bread and found them palatable. But I never could go their garlic.

Selecting a Milch Cow.

The best sign for richness of milk is a deep orange color inside the ears. Such is said to be infallible, but there are accompanying points that assist the expert in making this selection from a number. After examining the ears, feel the skin on the rump, and observe that it should be soft, velvety, and fall again to its position when the hand is removed. The hair should be fine and silky, with a yellowish cast underneath. The milk veins should be very prominent, large and uniform in well balanced, extending full to the rear, and well forward in front. The bones should be fine, the eye mild and expressive, the body showing a tendency to avoid accumulating fat, the teats even and at regular intervals, with the escutcheon well defined, dandruff being easily rubbed therefrom, and the cow should be not only a good feeder but a good drinker also.

Fodder.

I often read in the agricultural press advice as to economy of fodder, and paragraphs are frequently met with wherein the farmer is advised to feed beet tops, or cabbage leaves, instead of allowing them to waste. Putting aside the fact that corn fodder or other green crops can be grown so cheaply, I question very much whether cabbage leaves are food for cattle; they flavor the milk, unless fed after milking, and at no other time. Beet or mangoid leaves are good feed, but I would rather let the cows wander through the field and help themselves than bother cutting them for them. This I have done, and though I cannot go so far as to say it was a benefit to the root crop to be shorn of a few of its leaves, I know no injury was done.

Ghost Story from the Far East.

correspondent in Canton sends us the following story for the Spiritualists from the Marshall Islands: "The end of last year, or the beginning of this, an American ship, the Ranier, was wrecked on these islands, and about twenty men found refuge on them. But their number being too large for their supply of provisions, it was agreed that they should separate. The captain caused a small 20-ton schooner to be built of the remains of the wreck, and, taking ten of the crew and a share of the provisions, sailed away for another island of the group, about 300 miles off. The rest of the crew was left in charge of the first mate—a son-in-law of the captain. The second mate was sent off to make his way to Saigon and appeal for aid. This he did, finally reaching Hong Kong, when the United States corvette Essex was dispatched to the rescue, carrying the second mate as a guide. Meanwhile the King of the island on which the shipwrecked men were, who was kind and friendly to them, was full of forebodings as to the fate of the captain's party, and the second mate said they would never see them again, and so on. But one day he came with different tidings. It seems he was in the habit of holding spiritual communion with his dead wife, by name Olivia. In one of these seances he had, I suppose, asked her if she could give him any tidings, any hopes for his shipwrecked friends. She said that on a Sunday a sail would be seen, and they would be rescued. The King brought these news with great joy to the refugees, and with some curiosity they awaited the result. This must have been some four months after they were wrecked. Sure enough, on the following Sunday a sail was seen, but in spite of their efforts to attract attention the ship passed on her course. But the Sunday after that, the rescuing ship, the Essex, appeared in sight, and eventually took them all off. This story was related by an officer of the Essex to a friend of mine, who at once

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "28 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 28, 1882.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882.

Yours gratefully,
HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blisters, Sores, Bolls, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.

SEASON OF 1884

This story was related by an officer of the Essex to a friend of mine, who at once came and told it to me. I will add, for the benefit of any ardent Spiritualists or newspaper correspondents, who may desire to go at once to the Marshall Islands in search of new revelations from savage mediums, or to interview the King, that these islands are in the North Pacific Ocean, to the Southwest of the Sandwich Isles, and that there is very little communication with them.—[Fall Mail Gazette.

The Brahman's Terrible Mistake

Some shocking tragedies have occurred in the Sibsager district of India. A travelling honarie jeweller arrived late one evening at the house of a Brahman with whom he had a slight acquaintance, and displayed his wares. The Brahman, after making some purchase, offered to put him up for the night. The offer was gladly accepted, and it was arranged that the jeweller should sleep on the floor in the room occupied by the Brahman's son, the Brahman and his wife occupying the other room. While preparing to turn in the honarie heard the sharpening of a dao, and fragments of conversation between the Brahman and his wife.

Suspecting foul play, he induced the son to change places with him; and as soon as the former was asleep, placed a dummy composed of a bundle of clothes on the bed, crept quietly out, and ascended a tree at the back of the house. In about half an hour he heard the dao doing its work, then exclamations of disappointment at finding no plunder, shortly afterwards followed by a cry of anguish at the discovery of the mistake the murderer had made. From his place of concealment the jeweller then saw the Brahman come under the tree with a hoe. Here he dug a grave, in which he buried the body of his son. At early dawn the jeweller descended from his hiding place and gave information at the nearest thanna. The police found the body under the tree and arrested the Brahman, whose trial comes off at the next assizes.

A Knowing Dog.

A lady in Newport, who honors me with her friendship, owns a remarkable dog. He is a King Charles spaniel, I believe. The dog is certainly a beauty, with his silky coat, his long ears, and his sympathetic eyes. I don't know his name; it is "Too-too," "Tutu," or "Toto," and they all sound alike, and I never have seen the dear dog's name spelled out. When this famous dog is on exhibition in the beautiful home of my friend, he does wonderful things. His mistress giving him a bit of cracker, says: "Tutu, there is sugar in this, and sugar costs a good deal of money." The dog takes a little bite, and in his mouth hands—if a dog can "hand" a thing in his mouth—the rest of the cracker back. If he is told that the cracker is cheap, that it did not cost anything, he eats it greedily. Sometimes he is told: "Tutu, there is poison in that cracker; don't eat it." Then he paws it to pieces and puts it away from him. In everything he shows intellect and intelligence. Darwin, if you remember, exhibits a very pretty line between intellect and intelligence.—[Philadelphia Press.

JUGGLERS IN INDIA.

The East has long been famous for the expertness of its prestidigitateurs. Between the old Ganges and the Orontes, where the bodies of the people are lithe and their limbs pliant, the arts of tumbling, balancing, and moving the person rapidly and regularly, have been handed down in families for hundreds of years. Fanatical penances and religious orgies, in a country where the body is capable of the most unnatural contortions, first give rise to these tricks of legerdemain. They were supposed to assist in atoning for past sins or predicting future privileges. The arts of breathing fire, of protecting the human skin from the heat of molten metals, of safely handling red hot iron, of resisting scalding from immersion in boiling water, of charming and taming reptiles, and of immunity from the poison of their bite, together with kindred feats of magic, so called, may also have been witnessed any day as well, these last thousand years, in many parts of Hindostan. The cunning priest and needy conjuror still hold their power and increase their thrift in spite of growing intelligence.

Knowledge in India contributes to imposture. It governs the native population in the main without guiding it. In ten thousand towns and villages scattered throughout that populous empire, it is the power of the marvelous that holds every caste in subjection. The sagacity of the European residents unmasks the imposture in vain. The masses persevere in their belief that jugglers are possessed of supernatural power, and though they do not bestow upon them the attributes of gods, they pander to their wants as being possessed with demons.

I witnessed many years ago one of the two great impostures of that day in India. Neither, so far as I know, was ever detected. The one I saw was most satisfactorily explained both in theory and by practice. The other, of which I knew through friends, always remained a mystery. The former was "a man who sat in the air;" the latter "a man who was buried alive." One appeared in 1833 in Madras; the other in 1838 in the Punjab.

The first announcement of Apocawny Ragavah was made in the Madras "Male Asylum Herald." It was stated that this Brahmin of high caste had undertaken, for a stipulated consideration, to appear before the English Governor and Council, and as many friends and spectators as chose to assemble, seated cross-legged in the air for the space of half an hour.

At first people were inclined to believe the whole thing a hoax, but the contrary soon appeared. A card, signed by respectable names, shortly came out in the official Gazette, inviting all gentlemen, civil, military and medical, together with their families to assemble at a given hour on a certain day, to see a man sit in the air. The spot proposed for the exhibition was a spacious public square. Everything that would be likely to favor collusion or fraud had been with apparent fairness on the part of the Brahmin scrupulously avoided. The time was noon-day, the place public, the accessories, a pole fixed in the ground and an umbrella to shelter him from the sun's rays; nothing more. There were, indeed, conditions stipulated—such as time for preparation.

For the first few moments after the cloth was removed, the whole mass of spectators seemed too awe-stricken and astonished even to permit themselves to breathe. As they became convinced, however, that their eyes were looking upon a reality—that there was really no delusion—the whole air was rent with acclamations. To the Europeans, too, the exhibition was full of mystery. They agreed that it was the most complete imposture—for such no one doubted it to be—they had ever seen practised, even in India. The most scientific were at a loss for so much as even a surmise as to the cause of the phenomenon. It did not appear possible that it could be any machinery, for the most powerful glasses failed to detect even a wire connecting the seat of the Brahmin with the pole. It could not be nervous energy, were such a theory supposable, for the man who sat there upon nothing was one of the feeblest specimens of humanity. And at that early day Spiritualism, which accounts for all trickeries and cheats by the agency of invisible power, was unknown.

The Brahmin remained moveless, never once shifting his position nor removing his hand from the top of the pole, for exactly thirty minutes. He then offered, through the Pilewahn, to remain suspended as much longer, provided he were paid a certain sum named. But the English were too anxious to possess themselves of the pole used by him to admit of their brooking farther delay; besides which, from appearances, the man could sit there from morning till night without suffering the slightest inconvenience. Accordingly, it was intimated to the Brahmin that he had earned his promised reward, and might retire. Disengaging his hand from the pole, he then made a low salaam to the Governor, when his two attendants approached, and with the precision of experts threw the sheet over his head, disappeared behind its folds, and emerged in a moment with both the Brahmin and his pole.

What seemed rather unfair, since the man had apparently performed what he undertook, government peons now laid hold of him and his two attendants, and dragged them into the audience hall. Here the pole was examined by several scientific men and machinists. It was struck, sounded, and searched for secret springs. Some bevelled edge or bulge or projection was carefully looked for. It was in vain. The pole was as smooth and solid as iron could be made. The Pilewahn carried neither bag nor box, and readily divested themselves of enough of their clothing to convince the incredulous that no machinery was concealed about their persons. Within the canvas sheet there was nothing found. To be sure, the Brahmin was subjected to no examination. As every one who has lived in India knows, this would have been an unpardonable outrage upon the laws of caste. He had been assured, besides, that after his performance he should be subjected to nothing that could be construed into an insult to his creed; and as the touch of other than a Brahmin is pollution to a Brahmin, to have searched his clothing would have been a breach of good faith. But it was evident enough that, under the scant garment he wore, no machinery thing ordinarily necessary to support vitality was to be put away. He was virtually, in fact, to be hermitically sealed up, and to continue so under conditions that would appear to make collusion impossible, until the time arrived when means were to be used for restoring him to animation.

I have said that I did not myself witness any of the various experiments that were made to test the sincerity of this faqueer's professions. But I had friends who did, and who were not only eye-witnesses of his exploits, but participators in the work of laying him out like a corpse, placing his body in a coffin, burying him under ground, keeping watch over the spot, in several cases for a whole night, or once for a space of three days' time, and resurrecting and restoring him. These persons were men of good judgment, long resident in the East, and little likely to be imposed upon by any gross charlatary. Their veracity was, of course, beyond all doubt; and they declared, one and all, that, by a certain process, known only to himself, the man caused all the functions of life apparently to cease. He stopped breathing; his eyes closed, and his eye balls, when the lids were pulled up, had the dull appearance of a dead man's; his heart ceased to beat; his extremities, and gradually his whole body, became cold; his jaws fell apart; and in every sign life was shown to have departed. Pins were stuck into his epidermis, but there was no sensation of pain. The soles of his feet were tickled, his flesh was touched with red-hot iron, heavy shocks of electricity from the Leyden jar were given him, acids and alkalies were applied to his palate—it was all to no purpose. To all the uses of life, and to all its ills, too, the man was dead.

Their testimony was equally positive as to the inhumation. They themselves, in full possession of their sober senses, and with a determination to expose what they believed to be an imposture, saw the faqueer coffined, sealed in with the Governor's signet, buried five feet under ground, and each in turn watched the spot, in two instances for a whole night, in another, as has been said already, for several days, until the disinterment. His friends then took possession of the body, and the Englishmen were not allowed to witness the process of revivification. But within a few hours, the very same man, unmistakably the faqueer, Sudder Dewanee, who had died, been buried, lain for days in the grave, and resurrected, stood a living person, and apparently none the worse for his experiment, before them.

But there is better testimony still to this idiosyncrasy of Sudder Dewanee. An English officer dispatched to the court of Runjeet Sing relates the following in his published journal:

"The monotony, he writes, 'of our camp life, was broken this morning by the arrival of a very celebrated character in the Punjab. He is a faqueer, by name Sudder Dewanee, and is held in extraordinary respect by the Sikhs, from his alleged capacity to bury himself alive for any period of time. Captain Wade told me that he was present at his exhumation, after an interment of some months. General Ventura having buried him in the presence of the maharajah and many of his principal aides, and as far shelter him from the sun's rays; nothing more. There were, indeed, conditions stipulated—such as time for preparation, concealment of the ascent, immunity from interference, and order among the crowd, none of which, however, were considered unreasonable. It was to be a fair trial of the claims of the priesthood of Brahma to the supernatural.

The chief justice of Sudder Dewanee Adawlet wrote to his associate at Chinleput to be sure to be present at the trial. All Englishmen from stations within a hundred miles of the Presidency hastened to Madras. Expectation was everywhere on tiptoe. English colonels and captains, collectors of revenue and supervisors, provincial judges and palkee-bearers, arranged to be present. And when the day came the entrance to the English Governor's gardens were thronged with carriages and horsemen. A sumptuous breakfast commenced the entertainment—the band played the national air—the Governor and his attendants, in full uniform, proceeded towards the extensive awning—and orderlies were ready to fan the guests as they seated themselves preparatory to the spectacle.

The Brahmin, with the utmost confidence, walked into the space, and making a low salaam, commenced operations. There were two men only in his retinue. These, however, were Pilewahns—a race of men of steady nerve and herculean strength, whose training from infancy is to athletic feats. They came forward—splendid fellows, whose thews were like iron and whose sinews almost protruded from the flesh—and salaamed also. Then, according to Indian custom, having solicited and obtained the Governor's leave, they planted a pole firmly in the ground. This pole, simply an iron casting, resembled the shaft of a woollen mill, was, when fixed firmly in the earth, free from all swaying, without joints or appendages, and from the surface of the ground to its top it was about ten feet high. Throwing over it a huge tent of canvas, the Brahmin and Pilewahns entered the shelter, musicians meanwhile contenting the spectators who thronged around until the preparations were completed. Ten minutes might have elapsed, when the two assistants crept out, hauled off the covering, gave a jerk that denuded the pole, and revealed to the spectators the phenomenon of a man sitting cross-legged in the air.

There was no mistake about it. There was the pole. At right angle from its top sat the Brahmin, his right hand resting upon its summit. Nothing more. The rest of his body was separated from it an elbow length. There was no sign of other connection between the Brahmin and the pole. Indeed, to persons familiar with mechanical laws, as much as to the awe-struck multitude, there seemed to be no possibility of deception. A joint, at such an angle, subjected to so great a strain, no matter by what connection, would have been depressed. This was not. The exhibitor sat as level as if on solid ground. There was no swaying. Neither depression nor elevation was apparent. On a perfect plane, cross-legged, unconcerned, without the slightest apparent support, sat the Brahmin, counting the beads of his rosary in one hand, touching the top of the pole with the other, and staring with indifference at the multitude.

would have been a breach of good faith. But it was evident enough that, under the scant garment he wore, no machinery could be concealed sufficient to sustain him at right angles to a shaft of iron for half an hour, in a sitting posture. The money was paid, therefore, and the Juggler went his way, to reap, as he did for many months, a harvest of gain from all parts of India. Various explanations were suggested of the trick, for such it undoubtedly was; and a young Madras mechanic attempted, by means of cross-bars and rods, rings and rivets, to repeat the success. But none of the former were satisfactory, while the latter ended by the ambitious experimenter tumbling ridiculously to the ground.

The second imposture to which I referred was known all over India as "THE MAN WHO WAS BURIED ALIVE." It created far more excitement than the first. For several years the papers were full of the "burying faqueer;" private letters told about him; rajahs feted him (when ever he appeared above ground); residents gave entertainments to witness his marvelous feat; purses were made up to repay his loss of time (for he claimed no reward for his suspension of life); and there was not, and had never been within the tradition or memory of man, so indisputable a wonder in all the Orient.

Everybody knows that certain animals possess the power of suspending animation at will. The squirrel does it. The hare and rabbit and fox and woodchuck use it as a defense. Everybody knows, too, that in the polar regions there are animals who remain torpid for many months, neither eating nor breathing. Darwin discovered in the tropics thousands of three or four species of animals that astivated—that is, became inanimated—and remained so during the burning heat of summer. In the insect world, temporary death is as familiar to entomologists as temporary life. To say nothing of the batrachia and mollusks, warm-blooded animals—animals whose organs of life resemble those of man—do undoubtedly possess the power or submit to the necessity of a suspension of every function of life. The heart does not beat, nor the blood circulate, nor the senses act, nor the breath come and go. The creature, to all the definitions that life demands, is dead, and yet, at will or upon necessity, life returns. Why, then, should it be thought impossible that the same power or susceptibility, call it which we may, should adhere in man? At all events, men have lived who profess the same subjectivity or power; and no careful observation or thorough analysis has succeeded in detecting fraud.

To return to our narrative. Sudder Dewanee, a Mahomedan dervish, aroused the attention of the punjaub in 1838, by professing to be able to suspend the functions of life for any length of time. He proposed, in fact, to be buried alive under ground, and to return to life at a given time. The price, of course, was named, but nothing more. For this sum of money, more or less (its amount to be measured by the length of time inanimation was to continue), Sudder contracted to be interred like a dead man, and to remain inhumed days, weeks, or months, as the bargain might be. There was to be no nourishment of any kind given him during the suspension of life. Air was not to reach him. Every-month, General Ventura having buried him in the presence of the maharajah and many of his principal sirdars; and, as far as I can recollect, those were the particulars as witnessed by General Ventura: After going through a regular course of preparation, which occupied him some days, the faqueer reported himself ready for interment in a vault which had been prepared for the purpose by order of the maharajah. On the appearance of Runjeet and his court, he proceeded to the final preparations that were necessary in their presence; and after stopping his ears with wax, and every other orifice through which it was possible for air to enter his body (except his mouth), he was stripped naked and put into a linen bag. The last preparation consisted in closing his gullet by turning back his tongue. Falling instantly into a lethargy, the bag was closed and sealed, and the whole placed in a deal-box, which was closed and sealed. The box was then put within the vault, earth thrown in and trodden down, a crop of barley sown over the spot, and sentries stationed around it. The maharajah was very skeptical on the matter, however, and twice in the course of the ten months that the faqueer remained under ground, he sent people to dig him up, when everything was found undisturbed.

"At the expiration of the ten months, Captain Wade witnessed, with scores of the courtiers and the maharajah, the disinterment. He saw the seals broken and the box opened. The man was taken out; and upon feeling his heart, not the slightest pulsation was perceptible. The first thing towards restoring him to life was the forcing of his tongue back to its place. Warm water was then poured over his body for several hours, when he gradually came to life, and the next day was as well as ever."

I have given the account of the man who sat in the air, as I saw the thing done. I have given, also, the account of the man who was buried alive, as I heard and read it. No philosophical explanation of either is needed. They were both impostures, ranking in the same category with the witchcraft of the seventeenth century.

A Capital Scheme.

"What do you do when people come in and bore?" a warm personal friend asked of a merchant.

"When they stay too long the office boy, who is very bright and knows just when to interfere, tells me that a gentleman is in the counting room waiting to see me on important business."

"Ha! Ha! That's a capital way to get rid of bores who don't know—"

Just then the boy opened the door and sang out:

"Gent in the counting room waiting to see you on important business."

SCIENTIFIC GOSSIP.

Among the latest acts of the Hygienic Congress was a denunciation of the modern system of education and competitive examinations as eminently prejudicial to the habit of those subjected to it.

A mixture of 70 parts of air and 40 parts of hydrogen gas ignites at a temperature between 1,026° to 1,028° Fahrenheit, while the ignition point of a mixture of coal gas and air in similar proportions varies from 1,202° to 1,215°.

Two ounces of soda dissolved in a quart of hot water will make a ready and useful solution for cleaning old painted work preparatory to repainting. This mixture, in the above proportions, should be applied when warm, and the woodwork afterward washed with water to remove all traces of the soda.

It is announced in the Nature that a grotto from 8 to 10 metres high has been discovered in a rock washed by the sea, in the Morbihan, by M. Gaillard. He has since continued his researches at low water, and found some human bones, ancient earthenware marked with allegorical figures, and coins believed to have been struck by the ancient Gauls.

Recently the dome of St. Peter's, in Rome, was reeclad at an expense to the Vatican of $40,000. The old sheathing required such continuous repairs that it was deemed better to replace it. The sheets of lead which now cover the dome weigh 708,610 pounds, and would extend over more than an acre and a half of land if they were spread out flat.

"Suppose," said an examiner to a student in engineering, "you had built an engine yourself, performed every part of the work without assistance, and knew that it was in complete order, but when put on the road the pump would not draw water, what would you do?" "I should look into the tank and ascertain if there was any water to draw," replied the student.

Experiments indicate that the effect of light upon plant tissues without chlorophyll, such as roots, rhizome, blanched plants, and some parasitic plants, is to decrease the intensity of the respiration, more carbonic acid being given off and oxygen absorbed in darkness than in light. The amount of oxygen absorbed is, however, in the same proportion to the carbonic acid given off in light as in darkness.

It is made of two layers of rubber, with pure soft tin-foil between them, and it retains the flexibility and elasticity of a simple rubber tube. ## DOMESTIC RECIPES.

SPICE ROLL.—"My children are very fond of spice roll. They are always teasing me to make it on baking-day." "How do you make them?" asked my hostess. "I always like to learn all the ways of cooking possible." "I take a loaf of bread when light, and work in some butter and sugar; when it is light again, roll out about half an inch thick, and sprinkle with flour, spice and sugar; commence at one side, and roll up into a loaf; let it get light again and bake." "That is very much the same way in which I make cinnamon roll," said Mrs. B. "I proceed the same as you do until the spreading; then I use butter instead of flour, cinnamon, and sugar. Roll up and cut in slices; lay in a pan; let it get light, and bake. Mine are sliced before baking, and yours after." "I call them buns," says my hostess's sister. So an afternoon's visit resulted, among other things, in the above exchange of methods.

CHICKEN PIE.—For the crust, take equal parts of sour cream and buttermilk, one pint of each; a teaspoonful of salt and one of soda, and make a dough the same as for biscuit. Line the sides of a suitable baking dish (a milk pan is an excellent one) with this paste. It needs no bottom crust, as it is apt to be heavy. Have the chicken already boiled until tender in water seasoned with salt and pepper to the taste. Cut the pieces up well and lay them in the dish, and put in bits of butter here and there. Then cover all with the water in which the chicken has been boiled. It must not be thickened with flour, or in the process of baking it will be too thick. Mold some butter into the remaining crust and cover the pie with it, wetting the edges and pressing them well together. Cut some slits in the centre and bake in a moderate oven an hour or more. When there is no bottom crust used, the remains may be more easily warmed over.

TO COOK SALT PORK.—Soak the slices overnight in sweet milk. Scald them in clear water in the morning and fry. Then dip each slice in a batter made of a couple of eggs, half a teacup of sweet milk, a pinch of salt, and as much flour as can be readily stirred in. Cover each slice thickly with this batter and return to the spider, and cook until the batter is done. With workmen, this makes an agreeable variety.

COLD BISCUITS.—Those left over from tea may be made better than when freshly baked, by dipping them into hot water and placing them singly on the grate in the oven long enough before breakfast to let them get well warmed through. In warm weather, when ice is not to be had, fix the butter plate neatly, and place it in a pan of cold water fresh from the well an hour before meal time.

CHICKENS AND MUSHROOMS.—Clean and wash your fowls and stuff them with chopped onions and mushrooms. Fill the craws with the usual dressing. Lay them in a pot and pour soup stock over them. Simmer till tender, then take up on to a hot plate, strain the gravy and season to taste. Stir in a little sifted flour, stir up and boil. Some prefer a little milk mixed with it, and finely chopped parsley boiled in the gravy.

LAMB PUDDING.—There was cold lamb left over after it had been to the table in ## Mothers—Their Petty Trials and Some of Results.

I often think how little is understood of the causes that make so many women's lives seem so narrow and petty. People seldom think that we have to set our brains to an evenness with our children's of all ages and temperaments, if the family is large, and to try to keep pleasant and gracious all the time. Nothing stimulates so much as to break the monotony, by going out and away, if only for a little excursion to the woods in the bright summer or autumn days, or a brush against the varied minds that city life affords. The mother of a family, large or small, has cares and responsibilities, aches and pains, that are altogether her own, and it is often a wonder to me to see how bright and genial such remain amid many cares. "The back's fitted to the burden" is a homely saying, but a true one, that often occurs to me. As our children grow up and learn more of life, they learn to appreciate better the care and anxiety that have attended their earlier years, and it is a satisfaction to parents to remember that such will be the case. The blessing of a serene mind can never be over-estimated, and a perfect control of one's own spirit will be reflected in the spirit of the household, and form its happiness or misery.

"It is as cross-looking as its mother," I have heard remarked of an ill-tempered child; but no one knows, perhaps, the cause of that mother's humor, or the influence it exerted upon the child even before birth. Men who irritate their wives with every petty trifle, little dream how the effect of such a proceeding may be handed down and reproduced in their children as is the love of tobacco or strong drink. I remember well at the Philadelphia Exposition seeing two infants and their nurse on the grounds, and never did I see the force of expression so fully exemplified. One with a serene face smiled at the passers by, the other held its little face puckered into all sorts of contortions. Yet in dress, and feature, size and complexion they were exactly alike, the difference of the inward spirit making the only variation. Thesigns of old age are more easily seen on a face that bears the stamp of fratfulness, lines form that show the inner working of the mind. Avarice and selfishness are not to be disguised, nor the spirit of unrest that gnaws at many a heart. Yet better for us all, even amid small worries, to be able to govern ourselves, and fight against the narrowing down that is the natural results of our small but unvaried and manifold duties.

The Girls will Marry.

While so many mammas with daughters and carriages are watching the coachmen there are a good many mistresses of households who are watching the maids, says the Philadelphia Times. Few family necessities are so rare as good nurses and chambermaids. When they are good ones they are prized, and their mistresses are afraid of losing them. This is more than ever the case during the summer with nursemaids who are taken away to summer resorts with the children. Nurses are as much affected by moonlight nights on the beach, romantic country surroundings, and the persistent attention of adty of a simple rubber tube. It ought to be serviceable as a connection between a heating and illuminating gas supply pipe and a gas-burning apparatus which requires to be movable, if this sort of rubber and tin tubing can be manufactured of sufficient length.

In the course of his Cantor lectures on alloys used for coinage Mr. Chandler Roberts, chemist of the British Mint, said that a short cylinder was the geometrical form which next to the sphere, presented the smallest surface for the greatest weight, and, consequently, in order to reduce the wear of coins to a minimum, their thickness should be equal to their diameter. Such a form would present many inconveniences; but, on the other hand, coins should not be made too thin, and much may be gained by even a small approach to theoretical requirements.

Casting of bronze statues of Buddha is carried on in Bangkok. The process, says a late official report, is of the kind known as "en creperdue," and the alloy used consists of copper and lead, sometimes with the admixture of a small quantity of zinc. A clay model is first made; upon this a coat of wax is molded, and over this again is put another layer of clay. The whole is then baked, the wax running off through apertures left for that purpose, and the centre core being kept in its place by iron pegs, the alloy is then run into the space previously occupied by the wax.

To prevent the growth of moss or weeds on gravel walks it is recommended to sprinkle salt pretty freely on the paths, (about a pound to the square yard does for one year at least,) care being taken not to let the salt fall on the box borders or the edge of the grass. A damp but not a rainy day is the best for this operation. Some apply a boiling solution of salt (about a pound to a gallon of water) with a common watering pan, so that a pound of salt will be received every square yard of walk. A much weaker solution will serve the same purpose if it should be required again.

For Stutterers.

A gentleman who stammered from childhood almost up to manhood gives a very simple remedy for the misfortune: "Go into a room where you will be quiet and alone, get some book that will interest but not excite you, and sit down and read two hours aloud to yourself, keeping your teeth together. Do the same thing every two or three days, or once a week if very tiresome, always taking care to read slowly and distinctly, moving the lips, but not the teeth. Then, when conversing with others, try to speak slowly and distinctly as possible, and make up your mind that you will not stammer. Well, I tried this remedy, not having much faith in it, I must confess, but willing to do almost anything to cure myself of such an annoying difficulty. I read for two hours aloud with my teeth together. The first result was to make my tongue and jaws ache, that is, while I was reading, and the next to make me feel as if something had loosened my talking apparatus, for I could speak with less difficulty immediately. The change was so great that every one who knew me remarked it. I repeated the remedy every five or six days for a month, and then at long intervals until cured."

with it, and finely chopped parsley boiled in the gravy.

LAMB PUDDING.—There was cold lamb left over after it had been to the table in the form of a hot and then a cold joint, so we cut the meat off, cracked the bones and put over the fire in three quarts of water, with an onion, then boiled all down to a quart, and took out the bones; stiffened with bread crumbs, put in seasoning to taste, beat in two eggs and a bit of butter, and poured into a buttered mould; set into a pan of hot water and cooked for an hour in the oven. Turn out and pour gravy over it.

WATER COOKIES.—The following recipe for cookies I found in an old paper. Every one liked them and wanted them again: Two eggs, one and one-half cup of sugar, one cup of butter, one-half cup of cold water, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one of cream-of-tartar, though I use tartaric acid, which only takes half as much.

CANNING TOMATOES.—Many people complain of their tomatoes spoiling. The reason is that they do not cook them enough. We are always successful. After they begin to boil, season and let cook 20 minutes; can immediately in ordinary fruit jars.

CARLIFLOWER.—It is best tied up in a piece of netting. It should be put into salted water when boiling, and when done be put into a deep dish with the blossoms upward, and a cupful of drawn butter poured over it.

TO COOK PARSNIES.—Boil till tender in hot, salted water; scrape; slice lengthwise when they are nearly cold. Flour all over and fry in salted lard or dripping.

Miss Astor's Wedding Dress.

Miss Astor's wedding will take place in New York about the middle of November. Her wedding dress is now being made in Paris and will be sent over about the 1st of November. It is to be of very heavy pearl-white satin, made with a full princess train, which will be bordered by a pelisse of the satin and on the edge a ruching of fine point lace in a wild rose design. The front is to be covered with ruffles of rare point lace that belonged to Miss Astor's grandmother. The lace will not be cut but will cross over in flounces and at the sides will be caught down in a twist and held by a cluster of orange blossoms and pearls. The corsage will be cut square and bordered with the lace, while the sleeves, slightly puffed on the shoulders and reaching to the elbow, will be met by long white kid gloves, which are being made to order to fit the slender little hand of the bride. The slippers are to be of the dress materials and embroidered in white pearls, while the stockings will be of the finest white silk. The veil will probably be of illusion. There is a rare old point lace veil in the family, and this may be worn, although tulle is more becoming and preferred by the bride.

In one of the Philippine Islands it is customary, when a young fellow asks the old folk for their daughter, to send her into the woods at sunrise; and, if the lover finds her before sunset, she is his. If not, he forfeits all claim. The girl is given a start of one hour. This allows her a fair chance, and she can use her own judgment about hiding after she gets into the woods.

mer resorts with the children. Nurses are as much affected by moonlight nights on the beach, romantic country surroundings, and the persistent attention of ardent swains as the rest of their sex, and, as a natural consequence, a good many of them, about the time summer is over, "give warning" and go off and get married.

Only those who have been brought face to face with the difficulty know what a trial it is to lose in this manner a clean, tidy, obedient nurse, who is intelligent and faithful, and who not only takes a great interest in the children but is liked by them in return. But these, of course, are most likely to be the first ones to go off. For some unaccountable cause the summer season just closed has been a remarkable one in the number of maids at service in prominent Philadelphia families who have married or made their arrangements to marry before the winter. There are few families that went off anywhere with maids at all attractive but have had their maids matrimonially assailed or completely captured. In many cases the sources of danger were the waiters at the fashionable hotels where the families were staying. Some of these waiters are very gentlemanly and agreeable, as well as good-looking fellows, and they managed to wreak havoc in many of the handmaidens' hearts. There were some very amusing cases where families ran away from the places they were at to prevent their maids falling in love with the waiters. At the Berkeley Arms, the most fashionable place on the coast, where Cupid ran amuck in the kitchen and ante-chamber, several families took their departure from this cause.

In one case the girl is now on trial as daughters are sometimes tested. The family suddenly concluded to go to Europe, and took their nurse with them in the hope of breaking her infatuation for the waiter, a handsome Frenchman. When, as in this case, the nurse is French also, the mistresses have a hard time of it.

THE TRULY HONORABLE.—The truly honorable man takes pains to remain ignorant of things that concern him not. He turns aside from the confidential gossip, glances away from the open desk, shuns the place where a whisper is audible, with just as much care as he would use to avoid profiting by a mistake in his change. His curiosity does not crave the knowledge of such matters. It has the whole wide world for its area, and seeks its satisfaction in more wholesome directions. After all, the information to which we have no right is the smallest and poorest and least valuable to us of any that we can obtain. Let us cultivate a worthy curiosity on subjects that shall enlarge our minds, deepen our feelings, and strengthen our purposes, and we shall shrink from that ignoble inquisitiveness that revels in dishonest gains.

Nothing is easier than fault-finding. No talent, no self-denial, no brains, no character is set up in the grumbling business. But those who are moved by a genuine desire to do good and benefit their fellows have little time for mummery or complaint.

Nicolini is said to cast sheep eyes at the ladies. Patti had better mend the tenor of his ways.

The Napanee Express.

NAPANEE. FRIDAY, OCT. 31, 1884.

—A special despatch to the Globe announces that Sir John Macdonald has been examined by Sir Andrew Clark, and he pronounces him free from any serious ailment.

—It is in this language that the Standard cruelly gibes its numerous friends who were struck off the voters' lists: "Now they go around town with shamefaced expression explaining, 'We can't vote much, but our influence is great.'"

—The Peterboro' Review says that "it knows of no Conservative promise that protection could prevent commercial depression." It would take a very large scrap-book to hold what the editor of the Review does not know about political matters.

—The Standard last week returned to its attack on the County Registrar, and in the course of its wearisome string of words admitted that Mr. Mills had a perfect right to "refuse to come to the court and produce the documents without the Judge's order and the lawful fee." That is quite true. Then why all this talk about the matter? Mr. Mills merely exacted his lawful fee because of the abuse given by the party who subpoenaed him. He did no more than was right, and no more than anybody else would do under the same circumstances. The Tory organ had better hunt up some other grievance; this one will not pass muster.

—What has become of Sir John's little story about the two barley farms? A few years ago it was a sweet morsel on the lips of every Tory spouter. Now they seem to have forgotten it. The reason is that it will not suit the occasion. On the 17th Sept., we have to convey, may be put in these words, 'Sell and pay up.' Don't sell if you do not require to, and if you do not want to; but pay up your accounts any way, or rather your debts. This notion of leaving accounts unpaid is ridiculous and old-fashioned. It should be obsolete. Non-payment of these debts at the time when they ought to be paid, and at the time, too, when everybody expects them to be paid, has a depressing and deadening effect on general business, and increases considerably the costs and worries of trade. It is the bounden duty of every man who owes two dollars, or ten dollars; or one hundred dollars to the merchants of Lindsay, or Woodville, or Beaverton, or Cresswell, or wherever you please, to go and pay it now, and not put it off till winter or spring. Farmers should realize upon their surplus, and pay their store and other debts. If they think it wiser not to sell now of course they must act on their own discretion; but debts should not go unpaid. It is as bad for the farmer as it is for the business man. It will pay the farmer better to settle his accounts now, or on short dates, and not to let them run too long. It is not necessary to enlarge upon this point. Every farmer can see it. Let every farmer interested act upon it."

—The great contest for the Presidency of the United States will be fought out at the polls on Tuesday next. Both the Republican and Democratic parties are confident of victory. During the past week, both candidates have been given great ovations in the two great cities of the Republic—Cleveland in New York, and Blaine in Chicago. The processionists in New York were mainly liberal Republicans, who are supporting Cleveland. New York state is now considered pretty safe for Cleveland, and if he carries Indiana and New Jersey, which usually go democratic but are now considered doubtful, he will be the next President. Mr. Hendricks, the Democratic nominee for the Vice-Presidency, has declared himself straight for revenue tariff, and Cleveland is equally as pronounced a low tariff man. With these men at the head of affairs, free trade would soon be established between Canada and the United States, and both countries would be benefitted thereby. It is on this account that so much interest is taken in Canada in the present contest, and that our public journals desire to see the Democrats triumphant.

—The hundredth birthday of Sir Moses Montefiore, the great Jewish philanthropist, was celebrated all over the world on Sunday last. Service was held in all the Jewish synagogues, and Sir Moses, who is in excellent health, was the recipient of eight hundred letters and six hundred telegrams of congratulation, besides numerous addresses and bouquets. He attended the special sermon in London and insisted on standing through the entire service. At the conclusion he said, in a very strong voice: "I cannot tell a thousandth or ten thousandth

WHO IS BLAINE

A Knowing Farmer Tells what he Knows about the Presidential Prospects of next Tuesday.

They were seated around the dinner-table of a leading Dundas-st. restaurant last Saturday and the conversation turned upon the pending contest for the presidency of the neighboring republic. Various walks of life were represented among those taking part in the discussion—from the professor to the intricacies of the manipulation of the moveable alphabet, down to the groceryman, whose occupation has been made famous by the humorous pen of Mr. Peck. Seated about midway down the table was a venerable agriculturist.

"Yes," said the last-mentioned gentleman, "I have studied American politics since I was a boy; and I know all the ins and outs of the whole business."

"Well," queried a dry goods clerk, as he for the third time pushed his brass cuff button through the worn-out button hole, "what do you think of St. John's chances?"

"St. John's? Well, he might be elected, but I hope he won't. That one act of his alone of letting that Secretary of the Treasury of his escape to Canada with so much money—what was this his name was?"

"Eno," suggested one of his hearers.

"Eno, yes, that's it. That thing alone should defeat him. He had no right to let him off with so much money. These Republicans should be turned out anyway—they're too extravagant."

"How about Cleveland?" asked a noted ex-counselman who sat opposite.

"Cleveland—Cleveland? Oh, yes; that's the fellow that started this here town in Ohio. I was coming down Lake Erie, from Detroit to Buffalo some years ago, and we called in there. The harbor is a sort of bay, running for all the world like a pair of shafts, and we run right down in between them shafts, as it were, and stopped up against an old played-out pier that stuck out like an old whiffletree does when it gets turned around. It looked like a seedy, one-horse place from where we were, and a cloud of smoke hung over the town like a cover. But for all that he might be elected if it wasn't that the old greenback cry had about died out. Then them Democrats have gone to work and nominated a Dr. May Lockwood, or some such name. I think they must have been crazy. Now, if they had nominated Geo. William Curtis they might have elected him, but pshaw!"

"Well," asked one, "Who do you think will get it?"

"I don't know exactly, but I rather think that that widow—what's this her name is? Oh, yes, Mrs. Butler. She might get it. She's the temperance candidate you know, and the temperance cause has strengthened wonderfully in the past few years back. I know down in North Fredericksburgh where I live, my neighbors are all crazy to get a chance to vote for the Scott Act, although I don't know what the dickens they're going to do with their barley."

"What's your opinion of Blaine's chances?" asked the cranium skating-rink man, who holds down the foot of the table every noon.

"Blaine—Blaine? Who's he?" asked the agriculturist. But the five-minutes-to-one bell peeled forth in mournful music just then and the old fellow's question is still unanswered.

When You Feel Blue

and your back aches, and your head feels heavy, and you wake unrefreshed in the morning, and your bowels are sluggish and costive, you need Kidney-Wort. It is nature's great remedy, and never fails to relieve all cases of Diseased Kidneys, Torpid Liver, Constipation, Malaria, Piles, Rheumatism, &c. It operates simultaneously on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels, strengthening them and restoring healthy action. Put up in have forgotten it. The reason is that it will not suit the occasion. On the 17th Sept., 1878, the day Sir Richard Cartwright was defeated in Lennox, because he would not give "protection" to the farmers, barley sold on the Napanee market for from $1 to $1.10 per bushel. Yesterday, under a protective system, the same quality of barley sold on the Napanee market for 55c. The farmers should, after making this comparison, experience no difficulty in seeing that it was by grossly fraudulent statements that they were induced to reject the ex-Finance Minister.

On Tuesday last, the bill of particulars against Mr. D.W. Allison, M.P., was served on his solicitors, Messrs. Deroche & Madden, and the same day the particulars in the cross-petition against Mr. M. W. Pruyt were also served. The charges against Mr. Allison number over two hundred, while those against Mr. Pruyt count up about one hundred and seventy-six. A request has come to us from disinterested parties asking that the charges be published in THE EXPRESS for the information of our readers. This we cannot comply with without committing contempt of court. No doubt many of the charges on both sides are wholly groundless, and it would be a great injustice to the accused to herald to the world a charge of committing bribery or having accepted a bribe when they were innocent. A charge of this kind generally travels farther than a contradiction and invariably when a false charge is made the accused suffers more or less injury. Of course the lawyers on both sides are granted full liberty by the law to make charges if they believe there is foundation for them, but that does not warrant a publisher in circulating them broadcast over the country merely to gratify the curiosity of their readers. If that were allowed, a publisher might as well print the pleadings in any suit in the higher courts. When the case is tried it will be reported fully in THE EXPRESS, and then the charges and contradiction, if any, will appear at the same time.

The short paragraph in last issue on the propriety of farmers selling sufficient of their grain to pay their store accounts, so as to enable merchants to meet their payments and thus avert financial disaster, has met with cordial approval from many of our leading business men. They say that the tendency with many farmers is to hold their grain for as long a period as a year, and make the merchants wait for that length of time for payment of accounts which should be paid promptly every fall. The result is that merchants become embarrassed, business unsettled, and bankruptcy frequently follows. This evil is not confined to Napanee alone, but affects the whole province. The merchants in the smaller villages are also sufferers by this evil. The Lindsay Post has the following appropriate remark on the same subject: "Now, the message through the entire service. At the conclusion he said, in a very strong voice: "I cannot tell a thousandth or ten thousandth part of what I feel when, by the blessing of the Almighty, I have arrived at so full an age. I thank Him for His merciful providence, and I thank all my friends for their great kindness." Sir Moses has done more from his vast wealth to relieve distress among the Jews than any man living, and his benefactions to Christians have also been on a liberal scale. It was as a philanthropist that he won a baronetcy from Queen Victoria in 1846.

THE SCOTT ACT.

Defeated in Prince Edward, but Carried in Bruce, Dufferin, Huron and York, N.B.

[Special to THE EXPRESS.]

TORONTO, Oct. 31.—Complete returns not yet received; so far as heard, there is a majority for the Act in Bruce of 713, Dufferin, 884; Huron, 1,568, and York, N.B., 300. The Act was defeated in Prince Edward County, by about 125 majority.

A Wise Precaution.

[Peterboro Examiner.]

As a political precaution it is wise to look well after the voters' lists, to see that no proper names are omitted and no improper names inserted. The Reformers of Lennox look well after this matter and the result justifies their efforts. At the recent Appeal Court held in Napanee, thirty-two Reform votes were added to the list for Parliamentary purposes, and thirty-seven for municipal purposes. Had the Tory assessor, whom the wirepullers succeeded in appointing this year, been allowed to work his own sweet will, a difference of sixty-four in a parliamentary election, if it had occurred on this year's roll, would have been the result. It is as easy, if they are not watched, for the Tories to gerrymander an assessment roll as a province.

Sale of Toll Gates.

A few days ago the toll gates upon the Kingston and Napanee road were sold at Catarqui, Mr. D. J. Walker acting as auctioneer. The purchasers of leases for one year were:—No. 1, Mr. H. Barry, $2,400; No. 2, Mr. L. Babcock, $800. Yesterday the lease of a toll gate on the Kingston and Sydenham road was sold to Mrs. Dougherty for $400.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST. HOW RESTORED!

We have recently published a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical and permanent cure (without medicine) of Nervous Debility, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, &c., resulting from excesses. Price, in a sealed envelope, only 6 cents, or two postage stamps.

The celebrated author, in his admirable Essay, clearly demonstrates, from thirty years' successful practice, that alarming consequences may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.

ERNESTTOWN'S CENTENARIAN.

Sketch of the Life of Mrs. Smith—Interesting Reminiscences.

The Kingston Whig gives the following sketch of the life of Mrs. Smith, Ernesttown's centenarian, whose hundredth birthday was celebrated last week, and to which brief reference was inserted in THE EXPRESS:—

Mary Smith is widow of the late D. C. Smith, who died sixteen years ago at a ripe old age. She came from Schoharie county, New York, with her father, Andrew Leeman, about 1812, and settled near Wilton. Being United Empire Loyalists they found the republic a very warm country at that time of international trouble, and Canada was to them a land of refuge. They settled at Collinsby for a while in the early days of their sojourn in the province. Her father and mother were long-lived, living to be ninety and eighty years respectively, and her sister, Mrs. Dewitt, died last year near Wilton at the great age of 96 years. Mrs. Smith had nine children, of whom seven survive, and there is a following of forty grandchildren. Three of her daughters married three brothers, named Hartman, and survive them. They, with Joseph Smith and widow Booth, and our hostess of Monday (Mrs. Benjamin), brothers and sisters, live in that section. Mrs. Horning, of Dresden, Ont., is the only daughter away from the neighborhood of the family's first settlement. The youngest child, Mrs. Benjamin, is fifty-two years old. Thus, for longevity, the family is remarkable. Andrew Leeman came over in company with Elisha Lewis, Matthew Dice, J. Dewitt and their families, and they early became connected by marriage and have lived as a happy circle since. D. C. Smith, husband of the centenarian, was engineer on the main road between Kingston and Napanee, and of many of the side roads. Later in life he was Superintendent of Lighthouses, a post he relinquished to his late son, Darius Smith, so well known and regarded by Kingstonians.

Mrs. Smith is able to move rapidly about the house, and to eat heartily three or four meals a day, her digestion being remarkable, a result of hardy pioneer life in her younger days. Her hearing is not good, but her daughters are able to converse with her; while her eyesight enables her yet to do a little sewing. She still "keeps house" in her own room, and makes up the bed daily. She does not furnish a startling evidence of the ill effects of tobacco, as she has been for years a votary of its pleasures.

EARLY SCENES AND INCIDENTS.

Mrs. Smith related to her visitors on Monday many incidents attending her arrival in Canada. The refugees came over in sleighs with horses, and were nearly drowned in crossing the ice at Kingston. A foot path traced out by blazed trees was the only route from Kingston to what is now Odessa. The only house on this latter spot was Booth's mill, to which the settlers carried their grain on horseback, not knowing enough (as she laughingly said) to divide the grain into two bags to balance it on the horse's back; they balanced it with a stone on one side. The next house to be erected in Mill Creek, the first name for Odessa, or within a mile of it, was Paul Somers' tavern and a few years later every house on the road to Kingston became a tavern or "canteen," as then styled. It used to be said that if a man took care to stop at every canteen on the road he might go to Kingston bareheaded and barehanded without suffer-

THE SCOTT ACT.

Some of the Most Important of the Provisions of the Scott Act which is Going into Force.

In these days of temperance activity the words "Scott Act" are on the tongue of almost everyone, but beyond the hazy idea that the passage of the Act in some way or other puts a sudden extinguisher upon the free sale of liquor, the majority of the people know little or nothing of the provisions of the "Canada Temperance Act of 1878," popularly known as the "Scott Act," after its originator, the Hon. R. W. Scott, who introduced it into Parliament in the year 1878, that it might take the place of the Dunkin Act, which time had shown to be unsatisfactory in some particulars.

PROVISIONS OF THE ACT.

The Act declares that from the day on which a majority of the electors of a town or county shall decide upon its adoption no persons, whether or not they possess a common liquor license, shall, under any circumstances whatever, sell or barter spirituous or intoxicating liquors, or any mixed liquor capable of being used as a beverage and parts of which are spirituous. The only liquor which may be sold is that for sacramental or medicinal purposes, or for bona fide use in some art, trade and manufacture, and which may only be vended by druggists and other sellers specially licensed by the Provincial Lieutenant Governor. There may be only one of these vendors in each township or parish and two in each town, while in cities one vendor is allowed for every 4000 inhabitants. Liquor for medicinal purposes can be sold only in quantities of a pint or more, and only on the certificate of a medical man, who has no interest in the sale of liquor by the vendor or druggist who fills the prescription. When liquor is needed for use in any art, trade or manufacture, the applicant must procure a certificate signed by two justices of the peace asserting the bona fide nature of the application, and also make an affirmation that the

LIQUOR WILL ONLY BE USED

in the manner set forth in the application. All druggists and vendors must keep an accurate account of all sales and make an annual return to the Collector of Inland Revenue, giving the names of every purchaser and the quantity he obtained. Distillers and brewers, however, may sell liquor of their own manufacture in quantities of ten gallons or more, or in the case of ale or beer of eight gallons or more to druggists, licensed vendors, and persons whom they have good reasons to believe will carry it out of the town or county into some sections of the country where the Scott Act is not in force. Manufactures of pure native wines made from grapes grown by them in the Dominion of Canada, may be licensed by the municipal councils and other authorities having jurisdiction, to sell wines in quantities of not less than ten gallons at one time, except when sold for sacramental or medicinal purposes, when any number of gallons from one to ten may be sold. Merchants engaged in the wholesale trade may sell in the same way that distillers may.

PENALTIES.

The penalties for infringement of the Act are severe. Any person found selling liquor in violation of the law is subject to a fine of not less than $50 for the first offence and not less than $100 for the second, and to imprisonment for not less than three months for the third and every subsequent offence. An assistant is held equally guilty with the principal and receives the same punishment. All the liquor on the premises of such an offender is subject to confiscation.

teen on the road he might go to Kingston barheaded and barehanded without suffering. Mrs. Smith still bitterly denounces the drunkenness of the old times. Booth's mill was owned by a grandfather of Philip Booth of Odessa. It was a regular custom to go to church on horseback, and many a time Mr. and Mrs. Smith took their young family along, sitting them in front and behind on the animals.

IN A PORTSMOUTH ROMANCE

an uncle of Mrs. Smith figured, early in the days of American independence. He came to Kingston on a visit to friends in the bay that now makes Portsmouth harbor, saw with the Indians two white girls named Rogers. One of them made known her desire to escape. They had been captured in New York State by the savages, their four grandparents being murdered as too old to take along. Families grouped in those days because of the danger of life in detached settlements, and their parents were both working in the bush, and knew nothing of the massacre and capture until they saw the flames of their house and hurried home. The visitor secured the girl's release by an offering of presents, and afterwards married her and lived very happily. Her sister could not be persuaded at first to leave the Indians, but finally joined her sister in her home in N. Y. state.

The American Grain Crop.

The grain crop of America for 1884 is the largest aggregate ever recorded. The statistics given by the Agricultural bureau of Washington, are marvellous. The quantity of wheat is surprising, but the yield of corn is stupendous. The figures given are eighteen hundred millions of bushels. Just imagine the quantity of Johnny cake that means. Why it would cover the entire continent two inches deep with batter. The weight of the grain is five millions of tons, and at twenty thousand pounds to the car, would load five million freight cars—not counting the odd fraction of four hundred thousand tons, or forty thousand cars more! If a solid train was made up, reaching from Portland, Oregon, via the Northern Pacific, Michigan lines, and the Grand Trunk from Portland, Maine; then to Boston, Albany, Chicago, Davenport and San Francisco by the Union and Central; thence to New Orleans by the Southern and Texas Pacific, and via Mobile, Charlestown and Richmond to Washington; thence via Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe and the Mexican Central to the City of Mexico—a distance of over fourteen thousand miles, doubling four times across the continent and taking in half of Canada and Mexico, such a train would contain only one half of the cars necessary to move this crop of corn.

Prompt Measures.

Prompt measures should be used to break up sudden colds and cure coughs in their early stages. Hagar's Pectoral Balsam does this most speedily and effectively.

To the Ladies.

McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate will cure any case of Pimples on the face or Rough Skin on either hands or face and leave them soft as silk. It will also heal any sore when all other preparations fail. Thousands have tested it. Ask your druggist for McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate, and do not be persuaded to take anything else claimed to be as good. It is but 25 cents per box, at A. T. Grange's and T. A. Huffman's drug stores, Napanee; also, at James Aylsworth's drug store, Tamworth.

—Costiveness is the cause of the irritable "bad breath" of multitudes. Dr. Henry Baxter's Mandrake Bitters remove the cause and prevent the evil, and cost only 25 cents.

A Safe Investment.

Investing 25 cents for a bottle of Hagar's Pectoral Balsam, the best throat and lung healer known. Cures coughs, bronchitis, asthma and all pulmonary complaints.

lender is subject to confiscation.

PRELIMINARY CONDITIONS.

In order to submit the Act to the popular vote it is necessary that a petition signed by at least one-fourth of the electors of the county or city, be presented to the Secretary of State for Canada, praying that the votes of the electors be taken for and against the measure. Previous to the petition being sent to the Secretary of State it must be placed in the office of the sheriff or registrar of deeds for ten days, in order that it may be examined by all who desire to do so; and two weeks previous notice of such deposit must be given by two insertions in each of two newspapers published in or nearest to the county or city. All persons qualified to vote at the election of a member of the House of Commons may have the power to vote on the Scott Act. The vote is by ballot.

SIDNEY'S FOLLY

CHAPTER XXI.

For some days after the interview with the detective Sidney Daunt lived in a pitiable state of excitement and restless uncertainty and suspense, which was likely to tell greatly on her health, but which she struggled hard to conceal under an appearance of gaiety, which more than once was on the verge of becoming hysterical.

She was wretchedly unstrung and excited, far fuller of fear than hope regarding the result of Hoppood's inquiries and full of a vague terror as to her own share in instituting them. The poor girl was so utterly alone in her sorrow that it was no wonder her anguish was doubly increased thereby. There was no one to whom she could go for advice or assistance, no one in whom she dared confide. More than once she thought of telling Christine Greville of Frank's nocturnal visits, and her endeavors in his behalf; but she repudiated the notion as imprudent, for the poor girl was in wretched health, drooping daily like an unwatered flower in the anguish and uncertainty respecting her brother's fate, and Sidney feared that she would by her agitation and distress betray that something had been heard and seen of the unfortunate accused. And yet on that rainy October day on which Stephen Daunt had been thrown from his horse and his wife had driven to meet Frank Greville at Lymouth, the latter had asked Sidney so piteously if there was the least hope of his seeing his sister that she had been sorely inclined to risk the danger. That interview with her old friend and former fiancé had been far more painful than the first one. Gray as the day was, she was enabled to see by its light much of terrible change in the unfortunate young man which had escaped her in the moonlit summer-house, and it seemed to Sidney that her heart would never cease aching with a dull ceaseless pain which it was impossible to forget even for a moment; and she had vowed to herself then that she would leave no stone unturned until his innocence was proved.

He had not urged this upon her in the second interview as he had done in the first. One or two disjointed sentences had escaped his lips: but he had uttered entreaties that she should endeavor to have the murder sifted, although he had seemed even more downcast and dispirited and despairing. Mingled with the despondency was a strange resignation foreign to his nature, which Sidney could not understand; and she found herself more than once in the act of recalling enigmatical sentences that he had spoken which she did not clearly understand, but which seemed to say that if his innocence were proved it could only cost some terrible cost to her.

She had heard nothing further from the detective; night and morning however, as the post-hours drew near, her heart beat wildly, and she turned sick and faint with anxiety and suspense and dread. Sometimes she feared that her senses would fail, that her brain would give way in her terror and anxiety, that she would fall ill, and in her delirium

The color rose slightly in her face. She believed in Stephen's justice and kindness in all things but in this one—his belief in Frank Greville's guilt.

"Is Christine well enough to leave home?" Dolly asked. "I thought she was very ill."

"She is very ill," Sidney answered impatiently—"dying, I fear; but the change might do her good."

"What is her illness?" Lloyd asked, glancing over at Dolly as she sat opposite to him in her dainty morning dress of pale blue cashmere and velvet.

"A very common one," said Sidney, suddenly looking across at him with unhappy defiant eyes, "although some medical men will tell you that it is a myth—a broken heart."

"If medical men call it a myth, we in our profession are often forced to acknowledge its existence," the young barrister said, with some feeling in his tone. "Has this young lady seen much trouble then?"

"Yes, very terrible trouble," Sidney answered briefly.

"Some disappointment, I suppose?" he suggested.

"Does your professional experience tell you that a girl's trouble must of necessity be connected with love?" Sidney asked with a little bitter laugh.

"No, certainly not," he rejoined, with a slight smile. "But it is a natural association, I suppose. What is this particular trouble?"

"I will tell you," Sidney answered, almost with passion. "She had one brother—one whom she loved as dearly as, ay, ten times more dearly than many women love their lovers—and he was unjustly accused of murder, and sent forth into the world a miserable outcast, hunted and persecuted!"

"Were no efforts made to prove his innocence? How did he escape punishment?"

"By flight," Stephen said, breaking in suddenly, and speaking with unusual bitterness, as he thought how the memory of this man stood between him and his wife and held them asunder so cruelly. "Even before the Coroner's jury had given their verdict he had disappeared; and since then he has successfully eluded pursuit. I think there was no one in Ashford who did not sympathise cordially with his unhappy father and sister; but—"

"They could spare no sympathy for a man unjustly accused and sent out into the world, like Cain, with the brand of a murderer; but, who, unlike Cain, was innocent," Sidney concluded bitterly.

"I think I remember the case," Lloyd Milner said hurriedly, recalling the Ashford murder, and regretting his questions. "It was a very painful one. Well, Miss Dolly," he added abruptly, to change the subject, "is that momentous question of costume decided yet?"

"My costume for mamma's fancy ball on the first?" Dolly said nervously. "Well I am not sure. I am to have some more engravings by this evening's post; and perhaps, if you have nothing better to do this morning, you will help me to look over those I have."

"With much pleasure."

Stephen went away that morning—for the first time since his marriage—without from her face, even her lips were white; and, save for the passionate burning eyes it might have been the face of a dead woman, so colourless and immobile was it.

"And—and," she said breathlessly; but her voice failed her, the words died away on her parched lips, and she could only stand trembling, gazing at him with terrified dilated eyes.

"You would ask me if I understand the purport of your little note?" he said gently. "Is not that it, Mrs. Daunt?"

"Yes," she breathed, rather than uttered.

"How can I answer you?" he said, with some hesitation, pitying her intense anguish, yet angry with her for the deception she was evidently practising towards her husband. "The few words written therewith had been unintelligible to me, Mrs. Daunt, had a clue to their meaning not been supplied by the conversation at breakfast."

"Ah!"

"I cannot help guessing that the 'Christie' spoken of there," he went on, with the same gentleness of manner, "is the lady spoken of this morning; therefore I conclude that the writer of the note is the unfortunate young man her brother."

Sidney's head dropped. She was calmer now, with the calmness of despair. Doubtless all was lost. This man who had discovered her secret would betray her to her husband; it would be found that Frank had been in the neighborhood, and he would be arrested, and she whom he had trusted would be the cause! The thought was almost unbearable agony. She raised her hands to her head with a little despairing gesture, and pushed back her hair from her forehead feverishly. The young man, watching her, thought he had never seen a face so lovely in its misery, so miserable in its loveliness.

"It will not need much cleverness to guess that for some time you have been in communication with Mr. Greville," he said quietly. "For some days past I have unwillingly been forced to conclude that you had some secret which your husband did not share, and I was grieved to think it. Believe me, Mrs. Daunt, the course you are pursuing can bring you only remorse and trouble. To deceive a man so generous and true and trusting as Stephen Daunt is can give you only remorse at best. Why not have told him that you are anxious to do what you can to prove the innocence of Mr. Greville, and ask his help? He can advise and help you and take from your shoulders a burden they cannot bear alone?"

"Why not?" she echoed bitterly. "You remember what passed in this room half an hour ago, and you ask that! You heard how cruelly and bitterly Stephen spoke; you see how convinced he is of Frank's guilt. Even if he loved me—and you, who sees so much, must have seen that he does not—he would not help me in this."

"He would help you—only ask him," Lloyd Milner said earnestly.

"I have asked him. I have entreated him to do so; but he will not. Ah, if you remember the circumstances you will not wonder at it!" she went on, with increased and passionate bitterness. "She was so beautiful—so beautiful, and—" senses would fail, that her brain would give way in her terror and anxiety, that she would fall ill, and in her delirium betray the truth to Stephen and those around her. Sometimes she thought that she could bear it no longer, that it would kill her, that she must give way under it and let herself drift to that world where she might find peace. But at such times as these the thought of Frank's loneliness and helplessness animated her courage, and she struggled against her despair and took up her weapons to fight the battle of life—her weapons of smiles and gay chatter, with which she managed successfully enough to deceive Dolly, and partly to deceive Stephen, but not in any way to deceive the keen-eyed lawyer, whose gray eyes, kindly and almost compassionate as they were sometimes, Sidney was beginning to dread and shrink from, as if they had the power of reading her very soul.

But even if this arsenal of hers could not conceal the change in her appearance which could not fail to ensue from such intense, ceaseless, if suppressed, excitement—the violet shadows so deep and dark under the sweet eyes which had such a feverish lustre, such a restless light, the hollows in the pale cheeks, the pathetic droop of the sweet mouth which was so infinitely touching and sorrowful. And Stephen Daunt, noticing all this, felt sad and heavy-hearted for the woman for whom he would have laid down his life, but to whom he was unable to give happiness.

He himself was about again. The wound on his head was completely healed, although it had left a scar on his broad white brow and an occasional headache was its consequence, and his arm was progressing in the most satisfactory manner. Lloyd Milner's visit was drawing to a close; and while his host was most unwilling to agree to his departure and Dolly's pretty blue eyes grew wistful and sorrowful at the thought of it, Sidney felt a most inhospitable relief, for which she chided herself in vain. If he were gone, and Dolly were to return to Lambswold, she would be more free. She would, during Stephen's long absences every day at the mills, to which he gave daily more of his time and attention, have time to collect her thoughts and leisure for the relief of tears she dared not indulge in now, however much her eyes might ache and her temples throb. And, oh, how glad she would be to escape the scrutiny of those keen gray eyes which haunted her even in her sleep and made her wake up sometimes in an agony of terror, her brow damp with perspiration, her hands burning with fever!

It was no wonder then that she avoided their gaze one morning as she addressed her husband with studied calmness across the breakfast-table, wondering if, as she spoke, the intense nervousness under which she had been laboring would be noticed.

"Stephen," she said, "have you any objection to my inviting Miss Greville to stay with us for a few days?"

"Objection, Sidney?" he returned. "No, indeed! Why should I have?"

"Many of her old friends have shunned her since she has been in trouble," said Sidney unsteadily.

"And did you think I was mean enough to do so?" he replied, with a soupgon of indignation.

"With much pleasure."

Stephen went away that morning—for the first time since his marriage—without his customary farewell to his wife; and Sidney went up to her rooms too much absorbed in her own thoughts to note the omission. Dolly followed her up stairs making some trifling remarks about the ball; and while the girl went to her room to get the pictures as to which she had asked Lloyd's advice, Sidney went to her boudoir, where she was secure from observation.

Having locked the door, she sat down before her pretty writing-table and put her hand into the pocket of her cashmere morning-gown, to feel for a note which that morning's post had brought her. The next moment she had risen, grasping the table for support and trembling in every limb—the note was not there!

For the space of a minute Sidney stood spell-bound, unable to move in her agony of terror; then, recovering herself by a great effort, she flew, rather than ran, down stairs to the dining-room. Her husband's friend was there alone, standing in deep thought by the table.

"I have lost something," she said, too unnerved to conceal her agitation—"a letter. I must have dropped it. Not a letter—a note."

She was bending down hurriedly, looking under the table, and she did not see the curious look he gave her.

"Is this it, Mrs. Daunt?" he said quietly. "It can hardly be called even a note."

She stood up eagerly glancing at the bit of paper that he held.

"Yes, yes, that is it," she panted, snatching it from him with an eagerness strangely at variance with her usual languid, calm manner. "Thank you, thank you."

She was about to leave the room, when his voice arrested her steps.

"Mrs. Daunt!"

"What is it?" she said, standing in the middle of the room, her hands holding tightly the slip of paper that she had taken from him.

"I think it right to tell you that I have read what is written there," he said gravely. "I did so unintentionally in lifting the paper from the floor, where I suppose you dropped it."

Her hands sank helplessly to her sides, her whole form seemed to shrink and collapse, and a terrible look crossed her ghastly face. Twice her pale lips moved as if she were about to speak; but no words came, and they stood looking at each other in an awful silence which he would not and she could not break.

CHAPTER XXII.

"You have read it?"

The words came slowly and as if were unwilling from Sidney's pale dry lips; and, if Lloyd Milner had not seen them move, and had not known there was no one else in the room, he would not have believed that she had spoken, so harsh and changed, so unnatural did the husky strained sound as the words fall upon the stillness.

"Yes, I have read it," he answered, in a low tone, feeling pained and grieved at the humiliation her tone and manner expressed, as she stood trembling in every limb. Every shade of color had faded wonder at it!" she went on, with increased and passionate bitterness. "She was so beautiful—so beautiful, and— and Stephen loved her—not Frank only."

She had striven to speak calmly; but Lloyd, watching her, saw how she trembled, and how, but for the support of a chair on which she leaned, she must have fallen. At any other time he would have tried to soothe her distress; but her last words had startled him even beyond his own powers of self control, and he could only look at her in amazement, and wonder at the meaning of her words.

"You don't understand," she said, striving to steady her trembling lips—"you don't know all. Frank loved her, and Stephen; but Mr. Rutledge was wealthy, and she married him, and they were miserable. She," she went on, with sudden fierceness—"she is the one who deserved to suffer; she was the cause of it all, not Frank, whose only fault was loving her."

"As you say, I do not know all," he answered gravely. "I remember reading the case at the time; but it slipped my memory. Stephen was not even a witness I think," he went on meditatively. "If he had had anything to say, probably I should remember it all the better on that account. But am I mistaken in the notion that Mr. Greville, who was supposed, I think, to have eloped with the murdered man's wife, was engaged to some young lady here?"

"No, you are not mistaken," she said desperately. "He was engaged to me."

"To you!" he said, in intense surprise. —"To me."

Lloyd Milner was silent then. Sorry as he had been for Sidney—ay, and for her husband—a few minutes before, he was doubly sorry now; and although it was impossible that he should guess at all the truth, he could not help filling in for himself the blank parts of the story. Sidney, he thought, had married Stephen when her first engagement came to an end, as so many girls married, for wealth and freedom, and, having these, she could not resist attempting to prove the innocence of the man she really loved, even though she believed him in love with another woman. Young as Lloyd Milner was he had had a large experience of the world, and he knew something of the strangeness of womankind—how often they acted with utter disregard of self, and just in the opposite manner to that in which they might have been expected to act. That Sidney was terribly unhappy he did not doubt for a moment; but, much as he pitied her, he was yet more grieved for Stephen, whom he loved, and who had, as he feared, shipwrecked his life by marriage with a woman whom he did not love and who did not love him. And yet surely he loved her! thought the young barrister, remembering the few earnest words in which Stephen had asked him to come and see him "made the happiest of men," and the look of earnest passionate love in his eyes as he had stood by Sidney on his wedding day. Six months had not yet elapsed, and they were estranged and cold—and they had all their lives to spend together!

"Mrs. Daunt," he said earnestly, "I am an old friend of Stephen's, and, for his sake, I should like to be yours. Believe me when I tell you that nothing but misery can ensue from any such deception as this. It would be better—far better, to entreat Stephen for his assistance—he will not refuse you when he sees how your heart is set upon it—than to keep up this system of deception which must be—indeed I see it is—so distasteful to you.”

“Do you think I would have tried it,” she cried passionately, “if there had been any other alternative? There is none. He will not help me. He hates Frank, and, if he knew that—” She paused suddenly in terror, afraid that she had betrayed to this keen-eyed lawyer that Frank was in the neighborhood.

“I think, if he knew how much his wife was interested, he would give her his assistance,” Lloyd said earnestly. “Mrs. Daunt, spare yourself any more pain and humiliation—for you must feel ashamed and humiliated by this continued deception of a husband whose greatest safeguard should be his trust and confidence in you. How can you betray them and him?”

“I don’t know,” she answered drearily. “I can only hope that the shame and humiliation will kill me at last. You yourself have owned that a broken heart is not a myth. I don’t look like a very long-lived woman, do I? And my mother died young. And if you care for Stephen you would be glad to hear that he was free again,” she added, looking at him with a strange smile. “Shall I tell you how to free him? Go and tell him what you know, what you have discovered while he is still in ignorance of it. Tell him that the wife he trusts and esteems—although he does not love her—is disobeying his orders, is spending his money in an attempt to clear the man who was his rival for Sibyl Neil’s love; tell him that he has been in the neighborhood, that his wife has met him by night and by day; betray us to him, so that he may put the officers of justice on Frank’s track; and on the day you do so,” she added firmly, with a look on the beautiful face which startled him, “I will find a way out of the difficulty without any man’s help, or woman’s either.”

“Hush!” he said gently. “You speak wildly, and you do not know what you are saying. Why should I betray you to Stephen? I have no wish to add to your unhappiness and to his; it is sufficiently great, Heaven knows! Mr. Greville is safe from any interference of mine; but the risk he runs by coming here is a very great one, and his wisest plan is to do as he suggests here—go abroad while he has the opportunity. And your wisest plan, Mrs. Daunt,” he added almost coldly, “is to give up your desire of seeing him cleared and to run no further risk. It is a wonder your imprudence has not already brought about the result you dread so much.”

She made no reply. Her excitement was fading away now, and with it her strength. She sank down upon the nearest chair, breathing quickly, her pale lips parted like a person in pain. Suddenly Dolly’s voice was heard in the hall without, and a gleam of terror crossed her ashy-pale face. Lloyd made a slight reassuring gesture with his hand, and hurried out of the room; and Sidney heard his voice speaking lightly to Dolly, saying how long she had been, so long that he had thought she must have been making the sketches herself. Then came

Why Mountain Air is Healthful.

One of the best qualities of mountain air, that which makes it so delightful to the weary denizens of plains, is its freshness, and the higher they go the fresher they find it. Swiss savants have ascertained by observations made at sundry Alpine stations that for every 143 metres of altitude the summer temperature of their mountains diminishes one degree centigrade.

The two great advantages of a mountain climate are the freshness of the air and the intensity of the sun’s action. The second of these influences, as touching the human organism, is no less important than the first, for the solar radiation penetrates our clothing, comes in contact with the skin, and acts on the blood. A few weeks’ stay at a height of 3,000 or 4,000 feet above sea level brings back color to the pallid face and dyes the cheeks a healthy brown.

But young women, sometimes even young men, instead of exposing their countenances to the healthful action of the light, shade their faces with hats and cover them with veils, as if the complexion most to be desired is of that delicate and wholesome tint which comes of late hours and an indoor life. Where can we find handsomer men than the ruddy-faced, dark-eyed Uerner Strassenmann, who in the days before the big tunnel, used to keep the St. Gothard road free from snow, and spent his life at an elevation of from 5,000 to 7,000 feet above the sea. Their complexions were finer than that of any fashionable beauty who ever reigned in a ball room or shone at a court.

Another peculiarity of mountain air is the relatively little moisture which it contains. As we go higher the humidity diminishes in a ratio more rapid than the pressure of the atmosphere. When we reach an altitude of 6,500 feet we have below us one-half of the total amount of vapor our atmosphere is estimated to contain. The hygrometric condition of the air at these heights is subject to rapid changes. A fog, with its cold and damp, will often be dispersed in a few minutes by a whiff of warm air. Local cases may, however, render some mountains moister than others. For instance, the monks of the Great St. Bernard do not complain of the cold—that they can keep at bay—yet they suffer so much from rheumatism caused by the clouds that roll almost constantly round the Hospice, that after a few years’ service they are compelled to go down the Martigny to recruit their health. But Mont Jou, from its position is much exposed to the action of the south wind, which comes charged with moisture from the north Italian plains. Health must be sought at a lower altitude than 8,000 feet.

A Good Word For The Turk.

This brings me now to a subject on which I must appeal to the public sense of justice and fair play. I must protest against the indiscriminate employment of the word “Turk,” whenever there is occasion to mention any case of misgovernment, oppression, or cruelty in Egypt. It will probably surprise the reader very much to hear that, speaking generally, there are few, if any, Turks in that country. If proper inquiries were made about these Catania has been visited by another cyclone. Thirty persons were killed. King Humbert has sent £400 for the relief of the sufferers.

An observing man has discovered a similarity between a young ladies’ seminary and a sugar-factory, since both refine what is already sweet.

Trouble is anticipated from the rapid extension of a religious sect in Russia, which while remaining loyal to the Government, denies the Czar’s religious supremacy.

In retaliation for the action of the Communal Council of Venzielles, Belgium, on closing the girls’ school, a mob entered the chamber and drove out the councillors and afterwards pillaged the priests’ house.

his voice speaking lightly to Dolly, saying how long she had been, so long that he had thought she must have been making the sketches herself. Then came Dolly's sweet soft voice and gay laughter and his again sounded suggesting an adjournment to the library. Then all was quiet; and presently Sidney raised herself to her feet, and dragged her trembling limbs up-stairs to her room to prepare for her drive into Ashford to see Chrissie, shading her face with her hand, as she went lest she should meet any of the household.

Mr. Milner had been pitiful, angry. Would it not be wiser to take his advice and give up this miserable attempt? But it was too late now; the matter was no longer in her hands; she could do nothing now—nothing, save suffer and tremble, and live in suspense and terror respecting what was to come.

Impoliteness of an Old Bachelor.

It was in a Pullman sleeping car in the middle of the night.

The passengers were all asleep but two. One of these, an elderly female, was moaning in an undertone:

"Oh, I am so dry, I am so dry, I am so very, very dry—"

She kept this monotonous cry up until the other wakeful passenger, an old bachelor in the berth opposite, grew wild. He got up, groped his way to the end of the car, where the porter was engaged in blacking boots, gave him a coin, and told him to take a pail of ice water to the old lady and see that she drank every drop of it. Then he got back into his berth.

The porter carried out his instructions, the old lady thanked him gratefully, and all was quiet.

Presently, and just as the old fellow was losing himself in sleep the same voice querulously piped out:

"Oh, I was so dry, I was so dry, I was so very, very dry—"

The bachelor passenger bounded to a sitting posture, bumped his head against the bottom of the berth above him, poked his face through the curtains, and shouted indignantly:

"My dear madam, will you be kind enough to dry up?"

Had a Picnic.

Everything was ready and they were about starting for the picnic when a heavy rain-storm came on.

"Isn't it too provoking, George?" she said.

George agreed with her.

"We can't go in the rain," she continued, "but the folks are away, and if you like, George, we can spend the afternoon in the parlor. We will have it all to ourselves. You can hold a skein of worsted for me, and we can look at the album together, and I will show you some lovely sketches, and—"

"The parlor," interrupted George, leading the way.

In the evening a friend asked George where he had spent the afternoon.

"At a picnic," he replied.

"In all that rain? What kind of a picnic?"

"A regular picnic."

will probably surprise the reader very much to hear that, speaking generally, there are few, if any, Turks in that country. If proper inquiries were made about these so-styled Turkish Mudirs, and Turkish soldiers, who are so often referred to in terms of indignation and opprobrium, it would be found that they are mostly Egyptian natives, and although some few may have a dash of Turkish blood from a former generation as part of their inheritance, they have nothing in common with the Turk, as he is understood in England, except their Mohammedan faith. Very different are those men to those who serve the Sultan in the European or Asiatic Provinces, and it is unjust to both that they should be indiscriminately confounded in name. Turks there were in Egypt in the time of Mehemet Ali. Their presence and service was the essence of his strength; and it was with their assistance that he built up his power, and was able to bequeath a principality to his descendants. It was the policy, however, of his successors to get rid of this Turkish element or reduce it to a minimum in the government of the Province, seeing in it one of the strongest ties by which Egypt is bound to Turkey and consequently a great obstacle to the achievement of that independence which the heart of Said, as well as that of Ismail, so strongly longed for. It was a mistaken policy. The Turk, with his well-known fidelity and courage, was set aside, and the Fellah, with his subtlety, unscrupulousness, and cowardice came in, leading to the advance of Arabi Pasha, the bombardment of Alexandria, the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, and all the other evils with which the land of the Pharaohs is now again afflicted, and for which England will in history be made to bear the onus and the disgrace, unless by following the spirit of the national proclivities and tastes she stops in time and retrieves her fair name by generously admitting the errors so far committed and by at once adopting the remedy which will bear out her professions of friendly intentions while consistently acting with due regard to her acknowledged just interests.—[Blackwood's Magazine.]

New Bread Did Not Agree with Him

"Will you please give me a crust of stale bread without any butter on it?" pleaded a tramp.

The woman looked at him pityingly.

"Why, my poor fellow," she said, "you might ask for something better than that. I can give you some nice fresh bread, just baked, if you would rather have it."

"No," he replied, waving his hand sadly, "such things are not for me. There was a time when—but ah! never mind. I'm a man whose ambition is gone, and who has accepted hope's defeat. Besides, I'm troubled with indigestion."

Lots of Fun in This World

Wife—I notice a statement to the effect that in New York every year $22,000,000 are spent for liquor, but only $7,000,000 for religion. That's significant.

Husband—Significant of what?

Wife—That you men are having a pleasanter time in this world than you will in the next.

of the number. The typhoon was followed by another of great force two days later.

Count VonMunster, the German ambassador to England, had a consultation with Prince Bismarck, and will soon return to England. Prince Bismarck has charged him to assure Earl Granville of the good will and co-operation of Germany in the settlement of Egyptian affairs.

Science and religion each box the compass. An Italian scientist more than two hundred years ago taught that organic life does not originate by spontaneous generation. The theologians opposed the dictum by bringing forward the statement that the carcass of Samson's lion generated bees.

The Rhenish missionaries on the Toba lake, Sumatra, came near being exterminated in the disturbances of that country. The mangarajah offered 750 florins for the head of each white person, and a band of his braves were at one time close upon the mission station. A considerable amount of missionary property was destroyed.

During the recess M. Ferry has strained the powers of the Government to the utmost, and it is doubtful if he can persuade the Deputies to see the wisdom of his actions regarding China. A temporary coalition is spoken of between the Orleanists, Legitimists, and Bonapartists, to censure the Government, which would mean the defeat of the present ministry.

How To Live Well.—To live well, economy is necessary. No matter if persons are rich or have large incomes, they should be economical; for to waste is wicked. Many people would be economical, if they knew how, but the practice of economy is an art. Many people use expensive articles of food and dress when cheaper ones would be in every way better and more serviceable. Especially in regulating table-expenses is there great want of economy. A little information concerning the qualities of food, the amount of nutritive matter they contain, the wants of the human system, and the best way of cooking, would often save fully one-third, and, in many instances, half the expense. A wise economy in table-expenses is favorable to health, and thus prevents doctor's bills, and conduces to strength and happiness.

WORN-OUT MEN.—Life is too short to waste either in idleness or overwork. Some men work too little, and lose their health by inactivity—by the lack of sufficient exertion to keep the body in good condition. Others ruin their constitutions by over-work; and among this class are the thrifty business men, who, in their prosperous career, are making money so rapidly that they begrudge the time for a little necessary recreation. All their lives are spent in devising ways and means to increase their store of this world's goods; and thus from year to year they go on, the waste of strength and vitality being so gradual and imperceptible to themselves that they are unmindful of it until it is too late for diversion to effect any permanent improvement. Then, utterly worn out, they withdraw from active business for a few weeks or months, and learn to their sorrow that they have deferred the period of enjoyment too long.

Three Kinds of Shoes.

Nothing can be so injurious to a growing girl's foot as to put it into a shoe pointed at the toe, thereby turning the great toe inward, and producing one of the greatest plagues of life—corns, or, worse still, bunions. Young children should invariably wear straight shoes, with "elastic waists," as they are called, giving play to the muscles, and which in adults permits the wearer to walk long distances without fatigue. If heels are used at all; they should be low. There are three kinds of boots and shoes—those that are made purely on hygienic principles, without any consideration as to fashion; those that are purely fashionable, and the happy medium that combines the two. I should suggest to my readers to consult their interests by turning their attention to the third-class, for it is decidedly the right path. There are some new inventions in water-proof soles, some new pegged soles for running shoes, and many for the riders on bicycles and tricycles. The cyclist shoe seems to combine all the merits required, for it prevents slipping, and gives a powerful grip on the treadle, enabling the wearer to ride up hill with comparative ease. An excellent invention is the damp-proof boot sole, which consists of a light metal plate, or skeleton frame, provided with solid projections, or teeth, which are forced into and through the outer sole from the upper side, and are thus permanently imbedded in the leather. It is an inexpensive article, and suitable for all descriptions of boots and shoes, and perfectly pliable to the motion of the foot. The sole is prevented from running over, and the upper kept in shape without the inconvenience of heavy nailed boots. They are light and indestructible.—Cassell's Magazine.

Some Interesting Statistics.

A journal devoted to insurance interests prints some statistics regarding suicides in the United States during the six months ending with August. From these figures it appears that a man is three times as likely to commit suicide as a woman; that the period of his greatest danger is his thirty-fifth year; that the chances are more than two to one that if he kills himself the deed will be done in the night; that the latter half of each month is a perilous fortnight to him than the first half; and that the probability of his being driven to self destruction more by disappointment in love is slightly greater than that of his coming to a like end through dissipation. The moral of this last comparison is susceptible of reinforcement by bringing in the fact that dissipation frequently leads to insanity, and that the chances of a man dying by his own hand while insane are as three to two to the chances that the cause of his suicide will be either an affair of the heart or devotion to the bottle. There were more suicides in the spring of the year than in any other spring covered by these statistics. In the summer the number fell below the usual summer average; but the fall opened with an alarming ratio, which promises to make the number of suicides for the year somewhat larger than that for 1833. The usual annual average in this country is about thirty-two per mil-

Count Von Moltke at Ragatz.

At the little village of Ragatz, situated on the Ohur and Zurich line of railway, and in the Canton of St. Gall, there is sojourning at the present moment one of the greatest military geniuses the world has known. Marshal von Moltke arrived in Switzerland a few days ago, in order that he might take the waters of the famous Ragatz springs. His only retinue consisted of two soldier servants, and his personal baggage might easily have been carried in a child's wheelbarrow. A London morning paper recently stated that the renowned German strategist was mentally and physically broken up. This is not the case for, save in those signs, which must accompany 84 years of age—he having been born on the 26th of October, 1800—Count von Moltke presents no special symptoms of decay, while his intellect is clear, bright, and unimpaired. A tall man, somewhat bowed, with a rugged face, keen, deep-set eyes, overhung by shaggy eye-brows, a massive forehead, and a firm, soldierly tread, von Moltke would be conspicuous even among thousands of other conspicuous figures. In his manner and habits he is as simple and frugal as was the great Duke of Wellington, and he has a horror of being made a show of. Naturally taciturn, it is seldom he enters into conversation, especially with strangers, and meet him when you will he always seems to be wrapt in thought. He rises early and goes unattended to the Quellenhof, where the waters are drunk. Having taken the first glass, as by rule prescribed, he folds his hands behind his back and paces up and down, watching with keen interest the water drinkers, and smiling occasionally, as some tyro, taking his first dose, pucker his face up in disgust at the strong sulphurous fumes. These waters rise in Pfaffier's Gorge, three miles away. It is one of the most remarkable gorges in the whole of Switzerland. The furious River Tamina has carved a way for itself through a stupendous defile. In no place is this chasm more than twelve feet wide, while overhead the rocks meet, a few openings here and there admitting the light. Below the river boils with incredible fury, and so terrific and unearthly seems the noise, owing to the reverberations and echoes, that a visitor for the first time can scarcely repress a feeling of alarm. On one side of this weird cavern a wooden gallery about 80 yards in length has been built, being supported by means of iron brackets let into the perpendicular wall of rock. He who would traverse this gallery with a dry skin must clothe himself from head to foot in mackintosh, for the water pours down from above in endless streams. The hot springs bubbles up from the floor of a cavern at the end of the gallery, and run into an enormous reservoir. The cavern is hot, and the fumes of the sulphur so strong, that the curious visitor, being apprehensive of asphyxia, beats a hasty retreat. From the gorge the waters are conveyed by means of conduits to the village, and owing to the great fall and the rapidity with the water flows, it arrives at its destination with the loss of only a very few degrees of heat. It is a very powerful sulphur and iron water, and is said to work miracles in cases of rheumatism.

AYER'S PILLS.

A large proportion of the diseases which cause human suffering result from derangement of the stomach, bowels, and liver. AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS act directly upon these organs, and are especially designed to cure the diseases caused by their derangement, including Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Headache, Dysentery, and a host of other ailments, for all of which they are a safe, sure, prompt, and pleasant remedy. The extensive use of these PILLS by eminent physicians in regular practice, shows unmistakably the estimation in which they are held by the medical profession.

These PILLS are compounded of vegetable substances only, and are absolutely free from calomel or any other injurious ingredient.

"AYER'S PILLS are invaluable to me, and are my constant companion. I have been a severe sufferer from Headache, and your PILLS are the only thing I could look to for relief. One dose will quickly move my bowels and free my head from pain. They are the most effective and the easiest physic I have ever found. "Don't know as I can, exactly," replied the salesman, "but I can fit you a soft hat to match that head." Then the dude withdrew from the store a crushed strawberry hue effusing his effeminate features.

"Whacher cream wuth?" asked the countryman, pausing before the ice-cream vendor, backed by a crowd of companions. "Ten cents a plate," said the vender, seeing, as he thought, a huge sale. powerful sulphur and iron water, and is said to work miracles in cases of rheumatism and gout. The village of Ragatz is magnificently situated in a scene of true Alpine grandeur. It stands 1,630 feet above the sea, and close to the spot where the Tamina pours into the Rhine. Its natural attractions and the repute of its waters annually attract about 1,000 strangers. Count von Moltke has been in the habit of visiting Ragatz for some years. He generally arrives unexpectedly, and takes the plainest bedroom he can get, for anything like luxury he totally eschews. Von Moltke is an exceedingly frugal eater, wine he seldom touches wine, but now and again he takes a little beer. He is a good walker still, in spite of his four-score and four years. He promenesades alone, and without even the assistance of a stick. His habitual attitude is with his hands behind him. He walks slowly and with his head slightly bent forward. In the evening, after dinner, he spends an hour in the alon of the Quellenhof, where dancing and games are indulged in, and though he takes no part, he manifests great interest in all that goes on. At 9 o'clock he returns to his hotel, and half an hour later retires for the night.—[London Daily News.]

The Chinese Cabinet Maker.

I noticed a door and a window in a court-yard with a very original lattice. I had succeeded in getting a few similar ones, and when time failed me I rubbed black all over a sheet of paper, and then applied it to the lattice, thus obtaining a faithful life-size copy. The Chinese paper being strong, although fine, was eminently suitable to this sort of drawing, and also to copying inscriptions on stones or walls. Not having any such paper about me, I begged a Chinese to and fetch some for me, which he did with alacrity, and when I explained what I was going to do, he ran and got me a stool, that I might reach the window with greater facility. Some of them held it all the time for me, and when they inquired why I was doing this, I told them that the design was very beautiful, and that I desired to have a window like it in my own house. This pleased and flattered them greatly, and to enhance the merits of their town they told me the artist was a native cabinet-maker; some of them even ran to fetch him. I complimented him on his work, but he was very modest about it. I then tore a sheet of paper out of my note-book, and, to leave him a remembrance, sketched my own likeness and offered it for his acceptance. The on-lookers recognized the drawing and uttered exclamations of approval. The cabinet-maker ran off with it, greatly delighted, accompanied by a crowd of admirers. I only mention this fact to prove how easy it is to disarm the distrust and hostility of a Chinese crowd.—A Russian Through China.

SHOCKING CRIME IN INDIANA.

A Woman Murdered and Decapitated. Her Husband and Son Lynched.

A horrible crime has been brought to light at Troy, Ind., by the finding of the headless body of a woman in a cistern on the farm of Peter Backer. The body was nude. The head was found in a thicket a hundred yards from the cistern. The body, which was that of a portly woman, weighing about 160 pounds, and of about 40 years of age, was yet warm when taken from the water. There was a deep gash below the shoulder blade, as though made with an axe, and a wound on the forehead, evidently made with some blunt instrument. The body was taken to Troy, when it was recognized as that of Mrs. Stilwell Hindershot, who resided on a farm fourteen miles back of Troy.

A neighbor of Hindershot, while in Tell City, saw the murdered woman's husband. He also noticed a valise marked "T. H. Hindershot." While the steamer Drillard was at Troy a search warrant was procured and the valise opened and found to contain clothing of the victim covered with blood. Warrants were immediately issued for the arrest of Stilwell Hindershot, the woman's husband, and T. H. and William Hindershot, their sons. The old man and his son William were arrested and taken to Troy. The elder son refused to come and defied arrest. An increased posse was sent after him, and he was brought to Troy and placed in jail. He acknowledges committing the crime himself, but says his father and brother had nothing to do with it. The old man's testimony seems to throw the weight of the crime upon himself and the elder son. The murder of Mrs. Hindershot arose from her refusal to sign away the farm, to which she had a deed in fee simple, which the father and son wanted to dispose of.

Several hundred persons were present at the trial, and about noon an effort was made to seize the criminals and mete out summary vengeance on them; but the officers succeeded in averting the attack. The result of the preliminary trial was the release of William. The other brother and father were remanded to jail.

At 7 o'clock the mob at Troy took the eldest son out of jail and hanged him to a beam in the barn where the crime was committed. He made a confession that his father shot his mother and that he cut her head off with an axe.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon Treatment of catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of the patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefited, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissues, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination; this accomplished the catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favorable for a speedy and permanent cure the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King-street West, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on catarrh.—Montreal Star.

—In conversation with people living along Hay Bay, we are credibly informed over 1,000 rods of gil net, besides a large quantity of hoop net, is constantly set out from both shores, so it is next to an impossibility for a fish to get up to the head of the bay without getting caught. The nets extend from Thompson's Point to the head of the bay. The Bay is always the spawning ground for fish, and in a few years the fish will all be destroyed unless something is done to prevent such wholesale slaughter of the funny tribes.

—A correspondent of the Belleville Ontario writes as follows of the birthday dinner to Mr. John Huffman, of Sidney, by his children and grandchildren, on Oct. 23rd: "Nearly forty sat down to a sumptuous repast, comprising all the delicacies of the season, after which the Rev. Hiram Williams, in a very touching manner, addressed Mr. and Mrs. Huffman and presented them each with a beautiful silver cup and saucer, a gift from their children. It being a complete surprise, Mr. Huffman was not prepared with a speech, although he very feelingly replied. Mr. Huffman is quite smart, having been out that morning and done some plowing, although his eyesight seems to be failing. Several guests from a distance were present and enjoyed themselves exceedingly. It was the unanimous wish of all present that he may be spared to see many more anniversaries." Negotiations are in progress with a number of the leading singers and dramatic artists of the province, and as the matter is in competent hands the public may expect a fine programme. The object is laudable on the part of the young men and they deserve encouragement.

—A very interesting and instructive lecture, under the auspices of the scientific branch of the English Church Union, was delivered before a fair audience in the school room of St. Mary Magdalene's Church here, on Wednesday last, by the Rev. Mr. Fyles, of Montreal, subject: “Our Insect Friends and Insect Foes.” The lecture was illustrated by numerous colored drawings and by natural objects, and was listened to with great attention by the audience. The chair was occupied by His Honor Judge Wilkison, President of the Union, and at the close a vote of thanks was tendered the able lecturer on motion of ex-Mayor James, seconded by Dr. Ward. This was the first of a series of entertainments which the Union intend holding during the coming winter, and we trust our citizens will extend them every encouragement in their laudable efforts to provide the public with sound and wholesome entertainments.

—It will be remembered that two weeks ago complaint was laid before Mr. C. James, J.P., by Robt. McGee, of South Fredericksburgh, against some parties in Belleville who have on two occasions recently visited Hay Bay and desecrated the Sabbath by fishing and shooting. Being unable to ascertain the names of the parties the owners of the steam yacht in which they came were summoned. Those who appeared were Mr. T. S. Carman, Mr. E. Potts and Mr. John Lake. The two former proved an alibi and were dismissed, but Lake in his evidence having admitted that he was one of the transgressors, and could not remember the names of the others, the case was adjourned till Saturday in order to give him an opportunity to refresh his memory. When the case came up again Lake was fined $40 and $7.50 costs. The others evidently fearing that they might be similarly dealt with caused information to be laid against themselves before Mr. J. J. Watson, J. P., at Adolphustown, and the cases were heard on the 22nd, when each was fined $1 and $1.50 costs. The names are: John Henderson, F. S. Campbell, R. Yarwood, Jas. H. Starling, S. K. Balkwell, E. Corby James Edgar, R. M. Roy, W. H. Biggar, John Stewart, and Samuel Spangenburg. The contrast in between the two fines is very striking, and is somewhat in favor of the Napanee administrator of the law. It is reported that Messrs. Carman and Potts intend entering actions against the party who caused them to be summoned.

the anti-Scott Act party have forwarded a petition to the Government asking them to delay action, on the ground that many of the petitioners are not duly qualified voters.

Preparing for a Hard Year.

Mr. E. McKenty, of Bath, has issued a circular to his customers and the people of the bay section, in which he quotes all kinds of goods at prices that cannot be beaten. Rare bargains are offered in ready-made clothing, ordered clothing, furs, etc. Silver Star coal oil is quoted at 16 cents a gallon. He has an experienced cutter and milliner on the premises, and in these departments he can compete with the town and city establishments. Mr. McKenty is an energetic business man who always keeps pace with the time. He concludes his circular by saying that as this is a hard year he has made up his mind to sell goods cheaper than ever before. Give him a call.

Day of Thanksgiving, November 6th.

Thursday next being the day appointed as a day of National Thanksgiving for the blessings of Providence bestowed on our country during the year past, there will be two special services in the Church of St. Mary Magdalene (free seat). The first will be at 11 a. m., and consist of a celebration of the Holy Communion, the Christian Sacrifice of Praise and Thanksgiving, and in the evening at 7:30 o'clock a choral service with special anthem, etc. The Archdeacon will preach at both services. It is hoped that all members of the church, who have many mercies to be grateful for this year, will attend at least one of these services and make suitable thank-offering.

Hymeneal.

A happy hymeneal event was consummated at St. Martin's Church, Montreal, on Wednesday morning, in the union of Mr. F. E. McGreer, of this town, and Miss deMele, of that city. The groom was supported by Mr. W. T. Thompson, of the Merchants' Bank, Napanee, and the bride, who was elegantly attired and looked charming, by her sister. After the ceremony, a recherche wedding breakfast was served at the residence of the bride's father, at which a large number of guests was present. The happy couple shortly afterwards left the city for a short tour through the northern states, and will arrive in Napanee next Monday. Mr. McGreer is one of our most estimable young men and we trust that his wedded life will be “a long and happy one.”

DROWNED IN HAY BAY.

Sad Fate of a Duck Hunter from Belleville.

Early Friday morning as Mr. Ephraim Wagar and a neighbor were duck shooting on Hay Bay they discovered a capsized boat, and on close inspection they found the body of a man underneath entangled among a lot of decoys, which kept it afloat. They conveyed it to the shore where it was identified by Mr. R. S. Bell, of the Belleville Intelligencer, who was fishing in the vicinity, as that of Mr. James Clark, druggist of Belleville. Mr. Bell at first supposed that Mr. Frank Campbell, who was in company with the deceased a few days before, was also drowned and the news was promptly telegraphed to Belleville. The report of Mr. Campbell's death was promptly denied, he being safe in Belleville. It then transpired that Mr. Clark's companion was Mr. Frederick Dewsberry and they came to Hay Bay on Tuesday in the yacht Iolanthe. They started out early Friday morning in separate boats to go to a landing to secure permission to shoot on Hay Bay when the fatal accident occurred. In the darkness Dewsberry, on reaching the shore, discovered that they had landed some distance below the house, and the boats were shoved out. Arriving at the landing spot Dewsberry started to the house to awaken the man, shouting to Mr. Clark, "All right, Jim, come on." Clarke answered, "All right, Pine, old boy, I'll be there." These were the last words he heard from the deceased, who then appeared to be only a few feet from the shore, paddling in about two and a half feet of water. Many theories have been advanced as to the cause of the accident, the most likely of which is that, rising in his boat he made a false step and was precipitated into the water. Under ordinary circumstances the deceased could have extricated himself, but impeded as he was by two heavy overcoats the pockets of which were filled with loaded cartridges, the weight was too much to be overcome. The deceased was 35 years of age and head of the firm of Clarke & Co., druggists, Belleville. He was for several years Commodore of the Bay of Quinte Yacht Club, an office he held with credit alike to the club and himself. He was unmarried. The funeral took place on Sunday in Belleville, and was largely attended.

A Fine Grocery and Provision Store.

Mr. Sam. McLaughlin is now comfortably settled in his new store, which is probably the best appointed grocery and provision house in the county. The store has a fine plate glass front, which affords an attractive window display, and the premises are a model of neatness. The stock, which is large and varied, is displayed to good advantage. In the rear is a large store room where pork is cut up and conveyed to the cellar by an elevator which runs from the third storey to the basement, and there it is cured. The basement, which is large, airy, well lighted and perfectly dry, is also used for storing potatoes and roots of various kinds, which are conveyed to the ground floor by spouts. The third floor is used as a general storeroom for teas, groceries, etc. The goods are all raised by the elevator which has a capacity of 2,000 pounds, and works like a charm. It was manufactured in Toronto. Mr. McLaughlin is to be congratulated on the success attending his business here. Only a few years ago he commenced business in a very small way, and by his industry and perseverance he has worked up to its present large di-

In the Province of Ontario every year thousands are being slowly murdered by taking unsuitable, untried nostrums for such complaints as Costiveness, Indigestion, Liver Complaint, Kidney Troubles, etc., who might easily gain lost strength and energy by using McGregor's Speedy Cure.
